Webster junior high plan advances

Board undeterred by appeals court setback

By Erin Schmitt

Plans for a junior high in Webster County continue despite a recent ruling by the Kentucky Court of Appeals that eliminates a funding source.

The district has a $4.8 million bonding capacity and the board has elected to use approximately $4.3 million to $4.4 million of that funding for the junior high renovation project, said Superintendent James Kemp.

The Board of Education was originally eyeing a personal property tax hike as a way to speed up funding for the project, he said. A personal property tax is levied on property such as vehicles, boats, etc.

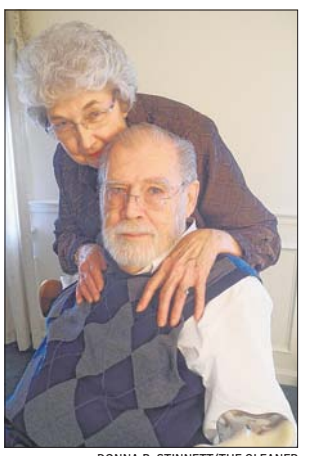

In Aug. 2011, the Board of Education voted to raise the personal property tax by levying a new six-cent tax that would be subject to community recall, according to a decision filed by the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

A month after the board's vote, citizens filed a petition with the Webster County Clerk's Office that sought to recall what had become known as the "nickel tax" levied by the board.

The school board held a special meeting in November 2011, going into closed session to discuss potential litigation regarding the nickel tax. While back in open session, the board directed its attorney to challenge the petition to recall the nickel tax.

Webster County Clerk Valerie Franklin Newell claimed the board violated the Open Meetings Act because it failed to validly authorize the challenge since there

Third-graders portray icons in class project

Unknowing visitors to Bend Gate Elementary Thursday night might have thought they stepped into a time warp.

American icons ranging from Betsy Ross to Walt Disney to Neil Armstrong assembled in the cafeteria as part of a wax museum put on by the school's third-graders.

Madeleine Johnson, 9, as Betsy Ross, tells her story to Preston Herndon at Bend Gate Elementary School's "Wax Museum" at the school Thursday evening. Each student researched a famous American icon to present.

The wax museum was the culmination of a six-week project in which students were tasked with reading up on their chosen icons, creating outlines and a poster display and learning facts they could recite when prompted. It gave kids the chance to be creative while developing their research and critical-thinking skills, said third-grade teacher Lori Farmer, who organized the project.

"Our standards that we teach with nowadays are a lot more rigorous and big projects such as these are a good way for me to kind of incorporate a variety of standards in one event," Farmer said.

Each of the roughly 85 participating students got to choose an icon based on their own interests.

The adventure-loving Sara Vaughn, 8, felt a kinship with Amelia Earhart, so she donned a leather jacket, brown cap and goggles to play the famed aviator.

"People said that she couldn't do it because she was a girl," Vaughn said. "She kind of stood up for what she believed in. Like, since she's a girl, she can still do things

Reverend faces difficult final sermon from pulpit

By Donna B. Stinnett
dstinnett@thegleaner.com

If the Rev. Walter McGee had his preference, he wouldn't be preaching his final sermon today as pastor of Baskett Christian Church.

He would be the picture of health instead of dealing with disintegrating discs, arthritis, scoliosis and other ailments, and would be able to minister to his sheep as long as they needed him instead of struggling to walk.

Instead, McGee, a former chaplain at Methodist Hospital and the first Family Resource Center director in Henderson County, is stepping down from the pulpit, and he and wife Pat are moving to a retirement community in Newburgh.

It's not without fanfare, however. Last Sunday the congregation at Baskett gave him a surprise "This Is Your Life Reverend Walter B. McGee" celebration that included guests from as far away as California and dozens of former students from McGee's 16 years as campus minister at the Wesley Foundation of Western Kentucky University.

Giving testament to McGee's widespread service to the community at large, the program participants also included representatives from Methodist Hospital, South Heights Elementary (where he launched the FRC program), the Henderson City Lions Club (at which he's had perfect attendance since 1981), Hugh Edward Sandefur Training Center, St. Anthony's Hospice and the young people of his Sunday school class.

There could have been plenty of other community organizations for which McGee has served as a board member or even

JFK fan makes birthday trip to an auction of his collectibles

COLUMNIST

It wasn't exactly a time travel machine, but it was the next best thing.

For Waverly farmer and businessman Donnie Greenwell, the Feb. 17 and 18 auction of President John F. Kennedy memorabilia in Amesbury, Mass. was a journey that took him back more than half a century.

Donnie was barely into his teens when JFK was inaugurated in January of 1961, and he remembers that event. Much more vivid to him, however, is the memory of Nov. 22, 1963, when the young president was slain in Dallas, Texas.

He recalls that the St. Vincent's Academy principal sent a student from classroom to classroom to relate the news that left Donnie and millions of other Americans "shocked and saddened."

He revered Kennedy, and over the decades that admiration has grown.

It's why he traveled to the small town of Amesbury to attend the widely promoted auction of 723 lots of items that were part of the private collection of Kennedy's advisor and close friend Dave Powers, who died in 1998.

Donnie, over the nearly 19 hours of the auction, purchased 31 of the lots and became the proud owner of coveted pieces that included two JFK patriotic speeches written by the World War II hero in the mid-1940s when he was a candidate for the U.S. Congress.

Local indigent burials are few but city does pick up the cost

By Frank Boyett

Counties across Kentucky, like much of the country, are seeing more cases of unclaimed bodies and families who can't afford to bury or cremate a loved one. Every situation is unique, but in a recent Associated Press report, coroners and government officials tell a similar story: The economic downturn has left many people without the money to pay for funeral services that can cost thousands of dollars, and it's falling on cities and states to cover the bills.

In Henderson County, most local indigents get buried with a minimum of drama.

"I haven't had to officially declare one in a few years," said Henderson County Coroner Bruce Farmer, although he noted he sometimes has to do a bit of convincing to get someone to take responsibility for a body.

But eventually someone claims the body in nearly all cases. And if the deceased had been a resident of the city of Henderson, the city can usually be counted upon to help with the

Suit alleges Illinois teacher duct taped student

The Associated Press

CHICAGO – A suburban Chicago school board member has filed a lawsuit accusing a teacher in her district of duct taping her 11-year-old son's face after telling him to stop talking in class.

The lawsuit filed this week in U.S. District Court by Princess Dempsey on behalf of her son says the Lindrop School teacher put an index card on the boy's mouth, then wrapped duct tape around his head.

Dempsey's attorney, Standish Willis, confirmed that Dempsey is on Lindrop's school board. The Broadview woman also has run unsuccessful races for Illinois state representative.

The suit names the teacher and Lindrop School District 92 as defendants. It seeks more than $100,000 in damages, saying the boy has suffered anxiety attacks and nightmares since the Feb. 27, 2012, incident.

According to the six-page filing, the teacher let the boy remove the tape after 45 minutes only after realizing he was crying; removing it allegedly tore out chunks of hair and left welts on his face.

"After the incident, (he) was left with a bald spot and his face appeared as though it had been whipped," the filing says. "He also suffered from the continuous bullying of his peers as a result of the incident."

Dempsey has sought a settlement with the district over the past year, but negotiations failed to resolve the matter — leading to the court action, Willis told The Associated Press Friday night.

"We have tried to resolve this all year — there were offers and counters, and they decided they did not want to resolve it," he said.

Messages left at the school district's offices were not returned.

The filing, which contends the boy's constitutional rights were violated, says the boy has also been showing signs of post-traumatic stress disorder, adding he is no longer the outgoing child he once was.

"He would sing all the time and hoped to one day become a pop star," the filing says. Now, "(He) has become much more reserved, not wanting to leave the house and only spending time with his older brothers."

McConnell: Criticisms of wife are racial slurs

The Associated Press

WINCHESTER, Ky. – Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell lambasted a liberal group on Saturday for criticizing the Asian heritage of his wife, former Labor Secretary Elaine Chao, calling its Twitter messages "racial slurs" and "the ultimate outrage."

"They will not get away with attacking my wife in this campaign," McConnell told about 100 home-state supporters at a Republican dinner in Winchester.

"This woman has the ear of (at)McConnellPress — she's his (hash)wife," the group Kentucky Progress tweeted on Feb. 14. "May explain why your job moved to (hash)China!"

McConnell forcefully defended Chao, who was born in Taiwan and who moved to the U.S. as an 8-year-old with her family aboard a freight ship.

"Elaine Chao is just as much an American as any of the rest of them," McConnell said. "In fact, she had to go through a lot more to become an American."

McConnell's aides had already criticized the tweets.

"Secretary Chao and her family are shining examples of the American dream: salt-of-the-earth folks who escaped oppression, came here with nothing, joined our great melting pot, worked exceptionally hard to build a thriving business, and then dedicated so much of their lives to giving back," said Jesse Benton, manager of McConnell's re-election campaign. "It is unconscionable that anyone would use blatant race-baiting for political gain."

Progress Kentucky removed the offending comments from Twitter after Louisville public radio station WFPL-FM aired reports about them. And the group issued two apologies over the past week for what they described as "inappropriate tweets sent by our organization."

Busy intersection to close this week

Gleaner staff

The busy intersection of Clay and Atkinson streets will probably be closed a couple of days this week as construction proceeds for a major sewer line.

Tom Williams, director of engineering for the Henderson Water Utility, said average traffic count at the intersection approaches 13,000 vehicles per day.

"Due to the proximity of this closure to the CSX Railroad main line tracks through Henderson, the detours available are longer than normal, and some turning movements will require several blocks of adverse travel. As longtime Hendersonians know, streets in the East End are narrow and congested. Avoiding this area over the next week may be the best option."

HWU is anticipating the closure will begin Tuesday, but that will be subject to weather early in the week. The closure should last approximately two working days. Following that, Atkinson Street at Clay will be reopened, but the section of Clay Street from Atkinson, east to the CSX tracks will remain closed for at least one more week.

Detour routes, which will be posted with signs, are as follows:

Traffic headed toward downtown on Clay Street will be routed onto Burdette, Powell and Letcher streets back to Clay.

Traffic headed east toward U.S. 41 on Clay will be routed onto Letcher, Powell and Burdette streets back to Clay. "Anyone traveling east who wishes to travel south on Atkinson will need to take Letcher to Cumnock Street, and Cumnock to Atkinson," Williams said.

Southbound traffic on Atkinson Street will be detoured onto Powell, Letcher and Cumnock street back to Atkinson.

Northbound traffic on Atkinson Street will travel Cumnock, Letcher and Powell streets back to Atkinson.

"Local traffic will be able to access the three blocks of Clay between Letcher and Burdette, and the three blocks of Atkinson Street from Cumnock to Powell, but no through traffic will be allowed," Williams said. "We ask for the public's cooperation in heeding 'Road Closed' signs and barricades."

The work is part of Scott & Ritter of Bowling Green's $3.6 million contract with HWU to install 18,800 feet of 30-inch-diameter sewer main from the Drury Lane wastewater plant to a new pump station at Burdette and Roosevelt streets.

The main is part of a larger $13.4 million dollar project to expand the capacity of the Canoe Creek interceptor, and transport more flow to the wastewater treatment plant on Drury Lane, thus reducing the volume and frequency of combined sewage overflow that enters the North Fork of Canoe Creek.

Fiscal court to consider park purchase

Gleaner staff

When Henderson Fiscal Court meets Tuesday it will vote on whether to pay half of the land acquisition costs for a new community park at Letcher and Helm streets.

The property is where the former Audubon Baptist Church stood between 1913 and 2009. The vacant lot is currently owned by Citi-Center Office Building LLC, which has agreed to accept $20,000 for the site. Last week the Henderson City Commission approved buying the land, but that vote was contingent on fiscal court paying half of the cost.

The city is also seeking a state grant of $40,350, which would help develop the site. The grant money would be used to install sidewalks, fencing, benches, trash cans and a playground structure expected to cost nearly $20,000.

The meeting will begin at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in the top-floor meeting room of the Henderson County Courthouse. Also on the agenda:

Health department: Deborah Fillman, director of the Green River Health District Health Department, will give her periodic update on the health department's activities.

Judge's scholar: The court plans to honor Paxton McGraw of Cairo Elementary School.

Routine: The court will pay claims and accept payments from the county attorney.

Bar trying to amass largest bourbon collection

The Associated Press

OWENSBORO – A western Kentucky restaurant and bar is on a quest to offer the world's largest selection of bourbons.

The Messenger-Inquirer reports Spirits at The Miller House in downtown Owensboro currently has at least 200 types of bourbon in stock on a daily basis. That's double what it had a year ago.

General manager Aaron King said that number puts it among bars with the largest selection of bourbons in stock. He said there are about 250 different bourbons.

"There are bars that claim they have 120 bourbons and say that's the largest collection and there are bars that say they have 250 bourbons," King said. "But when you go there, they aren't all in stock."

The type of bourbon available may vary from day to day, "but we'll always have 200 or more different bourbons and ryes in stock. I have bottles ranging from $5 to $300."

Spirits offered just more than 100 bourbons a year ago and was promoted as the "largest bourbon bar between Louisville and California."

With its collection doubled, King said they decided to display the collection along a wall.

"We've built new shelves and cabinets to display them," King said. "We get a few calls every week from people who have heard about it. We've had people who are traveling on business drive two hours out of their way just to see it."

The free event is for all area families with children who are newborns up to fifth grade, according to a news release. There will be live musical and dancing performances, family entertainment, hands-on activities and informational booths at the event.

The performances will be held in the Fine Arts Center, while the Sullivan Tech Center will have an expo, according to an organizer.

Each family will receive a literacy packet with free books and tips on how to increase reading at home.

Door prizes will be available. The grand prize is a Nook and gift card.

Easter egg hunts planned March 23

The city of Henderson Parks and Recreation Department is sponsoring a pair of Easter egg hunts on March 23 at Community Park.

There will be an Easter egg hunt for children ages 3-10 and the annual adult Easter egg hunt, according to a news release. There are more than 10,000 eggs to find.

The free activity begins at 10 a.m. Children should be present 10 minutes before staring time.

Parks and Recreation staff will be located in the large open-air shelter to provide help. Signs will be posted for directions.

The activity will be canceled in case of rain. For more information, call the Parks and Recreation Department at 831-1274.

Housing authority wins HUD award

The Henderson Housing Authority was honored for its sustained financial viability by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development during the recent Kentucky Housing Association Conference in Louisville.

"This agency looks for creative and innovative ways to maintain affordable housing and viability in their community," according to the HUD office.

"The housing agency has recorded a perfect score of 100 points on the Public Housing Assessment System (PHAS) for the past two years. Also the housing authority has not lost one point under the financial subsystem indicator in PHAS since 2007.

"In addition to maintaining such incredibly high levels of viability in finances, management and their physical assets, they have been able to engage and maintain community partnerships with the city of Henderson and local non-profits" which has resulted in such developments as Huffman Square on Martin Luther King Avenue, which was opened in late January.

Police investigating body in trash

Police are investigating after a man's body was found in a trash receptacle in Louisville.

Police spokesman Dwight Mitchell told The Courier-Journal that the man had been injured and officers "do believe foul play was involved."

Officers canvassed the neighborhood after the body was found Friday by an employee of Greater Louisville Funeral Limousine Service who was emptying trash.

Reading a hot idea on cold winter day

DAVID DIXON
EDITOR

As our winter stretches into March and the daffodils try to bloom while the snow falls, I started to make a list of the top 10 reasons I like winter.

1. Christmas
2. Basketball

Uh, I'm pretty much stuck after that. I won't make it to 10, but there is one more reason I like winter: Reading.

Reading is a year-round activity in my house, but there's not much better on a cold winter's night when the rain, snow, sleet, freezing rain or ice (You can pick just one or your favorite combination) is swirling outside than to sit in a quiet house under a lone light and read.

It might be the adventures of that famous Baker Street detective or another tale from the imagination, the exploits of our countrymen in history or the riddles of the ancient world, a modern-day mystery picked up as a pastime in an airport bookstore or even the latest Sports Illustrated. I enjoy that time when I have nothing else to do but read.

I used to be able to read deep into the wee hours of the night, chewing through big chunks of one volume or another. Nowadays I wake up in the wee hours of the night with an open book flattened on my chest, having lost my place and the track of time. It's not the book's fault. I don't make it much past midnight these days.

Not only a used-to-be night owl is flipping the pages this time of year. That swishing sound you hear is schoolkids across Henderson County and Kentucky celebrating reading and literacy. Read Across America events tied to the March 2 birthday of the famous Dr. Seuss were going on last week in local schools and continue into the week ahead.

On Friday, Kentucky's first lady, Jane Beshear, hosted more than 4,000 of her closest reading friends, all of them fourth-graders from Central Kentucky, at Rupp Arena to kick off Kentucky's third annual Literacy Celebration Week.

"As a former teacher, I have seen firsthand how valuable the love of reading can be in a child's success in school and later in life," she said in a news release.

"In the Commonwealth, we are reinforcing the importance of reading and literacy for our children through programs and events such as the Literacy Celebration Week.

"This week is not only a time to celebrate the joy of reading, but it also helps Kentuckians to focus our efforts on improving literacy on all levels."

A joint effort by the Collaborative Center for Literacy Development, the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives and the first lady, the "celebration's goal is to highlight the importance of literacy for Kentuckians of all ages, promote reading, celebrate literacy accomplishments and focus on the challenges we still face as a state."

The first lady will bring her literacy message to Henderson on Monday when she visits the Fine Arts Center on the Henderson Community College campus.

And then the Henderson County Early Childhood Council will hold its fifth annual Family Literacy Day from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. March 9, at the Fine Arts Center and the Sullivan Tech Center.

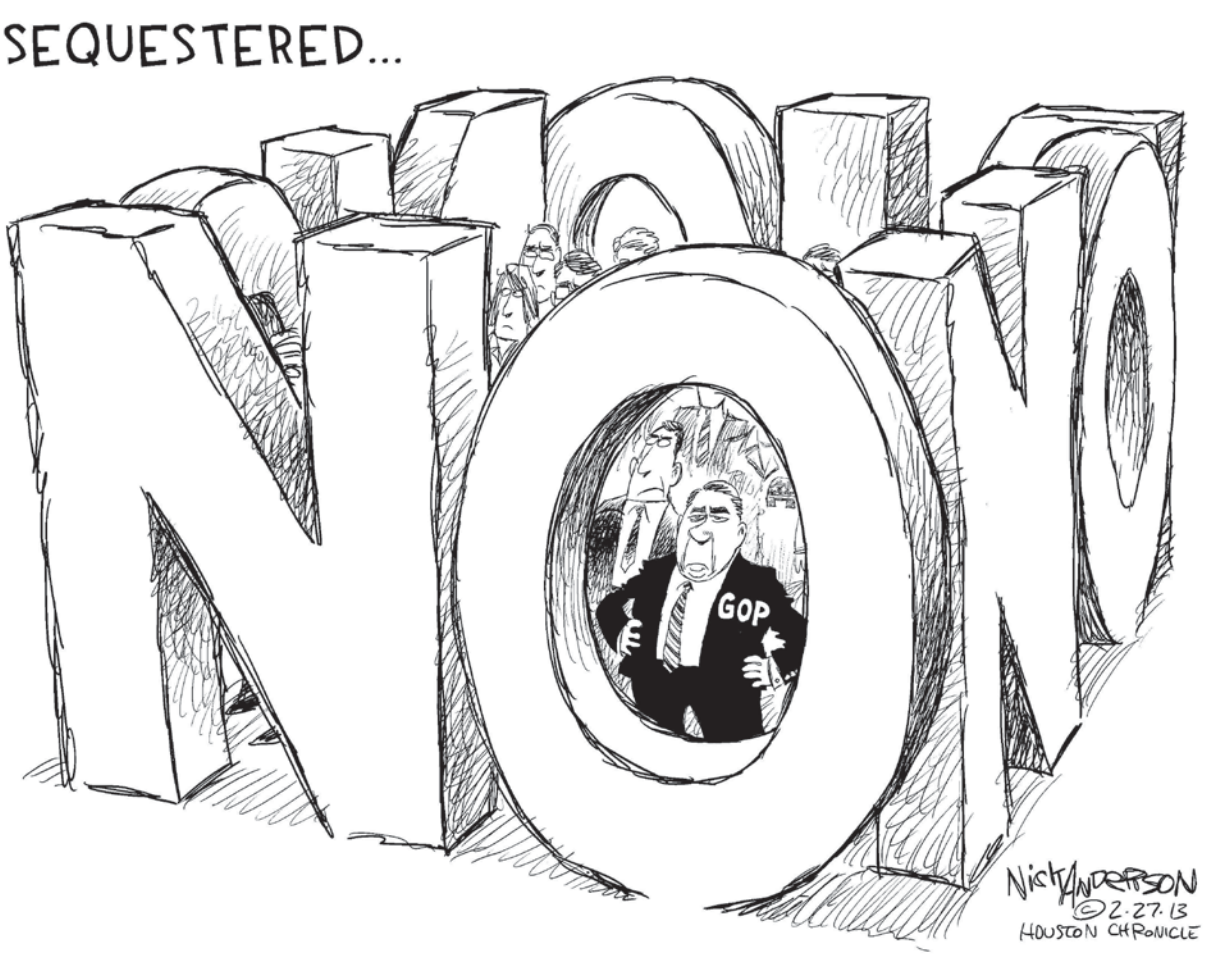

The free event for all families with children who are newborns up to fifth grade will include live musical and dancing performances, hands-on activities and informational booths. Each family will also receive free books (free books!) and tips on how to increase reading at home.

Our schools and local college are rightfully leading the way on literacy here. Teachers bestow a blessed gift when they teach a child to read. What else opens the doors to worlds past, present and future?

But we shouldn't let teachers have all the fun. Parents, grandparents, everyone who cares about a child can enjoy that special time when sharing a book.

So here's another list for those who love kids: Food, clothing, shelter, exercise and reading. Everything starts with those.

Founders wanted public armed

By David McAdams
Special to The Gleaner

It never ceases to be surprising how many of our elected officials are ignorant of or misunderstand the people's right to bear arms under the Second Amendment to our Constitution.

To fully understand why our Founding Fathers saw the need to include this right in our Constitution one need only to read Federalist Paper No. 46. In his writing James Madison details why the people are guaranteed this right. I would challenge all citizens to read this document as written by this brilliant man our fourth president.

We were given this right for one main reason and wisely so. We were not mainly given this right for the purpose of personal protection, hunting, sport or target shooting, although they too are valid reasons. We were given this right, first and foremost, in order that the people have the ability to resist a tyrannical government.

The founders were intimately familiar with tyrannical government and wanted to prevent the citizenry of the future from ever again being ruled by tyrannical government should it attempt to come to power on our soil. I urge all citizens to educate themselves about our founding documents and the wisdom of our Founding Fathers. The truth is always true.

To believe that criminals will be thwarted from their heinous crimes by infringing on the rights of law-abiding citizens is folly. The right to keep and bear arms is the God given right of a free people. The lack of swift enforcement of our laws and the lack of justice is the problem today, and not that weapons are available to law-abiding citizens. Criminal intent is the issue. Criminals break laws. They break firearms laws.

The most horrific terrorist attack ever carried out on American soil occurred Sept. 11, 2001. The terrorists' weapons of choice were box cutters and commercial aircraft. Many tools or weapons can be used for harm and criminal activity. Restricting inanimate objects does not address the root cause of crime.

Please consider the following statements:

"The strongest reason for the people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as a last resort, to protect themselves against tyranny in government." — Thomas Jefferson.

"Firearms stand next in importance to the Constitution itself. They are the American people's liberty teeth and keystone under independence .... From the hour the Pilgrims landed, to the present day, events, occurrences and tendencies prove that to insure peace, security and happiness, the rifle and pistol are equally indispensable .... the very atmosphere of firearms everywhere restrains evil interference — they deserve a place of honor with all that is good." — George Washington.

Restricting law-abiding citizens firearms rights in any way won't stop a criminal from kicking down a door and invading a home in the middle of the night. A firearm in the hands of a trained citizen will save the lives of a family. Both happen frequently in this day and time. Will you be a victim or victor if attacked?

The writer is a Henderson resident.

A lot of good goes on at Municipal

I read with much interest in Wednesday's Gleaner about all of the negative things that were happening at the city golf course.

As an observer and a member of the Municipal Golf Course, the positives outweigh the negatives tenfold. To be successful you have to keep the negatives and positives separated by the undecided.

By the way, where was this Golf Alliance when some real funny stuff was going on?

Graham opting for political points over people

ANN McFEATTERS
COLUMNIST

We used to think if this were ancient Rome, Lindsey Graham, the senior Republican senator from South Carolina, would be on the side of the reformers.

We thought he'd be the senator counseling wisdom, shaming colleagues for corruption and working through compromise for better government.

We're no longer sure about that.

Graham has become a raging firebrand, a rigid conservative with seemingly little compassion, who appears to have no long-range view of the future.

The Graham of today's Senate got in a shouting match with the police chief of Milwaukee, who had come to Capitol Hill begging for help on behalf of law enforcement to get guns away from criminals. Graham became so rude in a hearing on gun control that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., had to plead for civility.

Graham's point? Even after children were massacred by an assault weapon in their elementary school in Connecticut, the country does not need more laws requiring background checks to buy guns. The country doesn't need a ban on civilian ownership of military-style assault weapons. The country doesn't need a ban on high-capacity magazines.

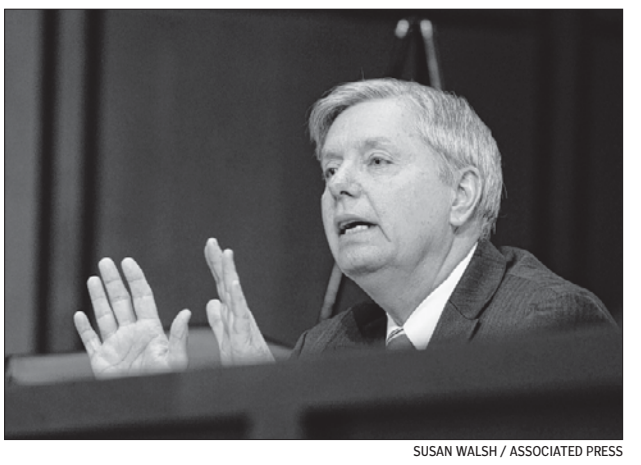

Here is what Graham said: "I own an AR-15. And you may not understand why I want to own an AR-15, and I may not understand what movies you want to watch." Huh? "But we are talking about trying to solve a problem that has, as its central core, that the people who are committing these crimes should never have any gun or one bullet."

And we used to think Graham, with a background as an Air Force lawyer, was logical.

The Graham of today's Senate excoriated his fellow Republican, former Nebraska senator Chuck Hagel, President Barack Obama's choice to run the Pentagon, for such sins as not wanting to go to war with Iran, for worrying that Israel has too much clout in Congress, for criticizing former President George W. Bush on his handling of the war in Iraq.

Even after it was clear that Hagel would win confirmation, which he did, narrowly, Graham went on record opposing even holding a vote on confirmation. This sent a signal around the globe that leading Republicans don't care if Hagel fails or not.

Conventional wisdom is that the 57-year-old Graham is polishing his conservative credentials because he faces re-election next year and is all but certain to have a serious primary challenge from the right. A number of thoughtful, hard-working Republicans such as the greatly respected Richard Lugar of Indiana have been pushed out of office by knee-jerk Tea Partiers who think "compromise" is a dirty word.

SUSAN WALSH / ASSOCIATED PRESS

Senate Judiciary Committee member Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C. questions Milwaukee Police Chief Edward Flynn, during the committee's hearing Wednesday on the Assault Weapons Ban of 2013.

Graham is also part of a bipartisan group working for immigration reform through practical legislation to deal with the reality of at least 11 million undocumented workers in the United States while making the border safer and easier for employers to verify the legal status of employees.

He already has been targeted by groups which oppose any path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants. A six-figure ad buy against Graham argues: "Who elected Lindsey Graham to demand millions more immigrant workers when so many South Carolinians are jobless?"

Graham wants to win re-election next year and clearly gives more weight to that than criticism from the few remaining moderates who feel betrayed by his hard swing to the right.

Perhaps Graham really believes Obama should not have his choice of people in his Cabinet. (He helped torpedo Susan Rice as secretary of state and argued against John Brennan to run the CIA.) Perhaps in his heart he does believe Americans should own as many assault weapons as possible, along with bullets designed to rip up a human's insides. (Children of Newtown had as many as 11 bullets each in their tiny bodies.) Perhaps he does believe Tea Partiers are correct in despising much of what government does, although he once called them a flash in the pan.

Perhaps, for Lindsey Graham, the end justifies the means.

Henderson's city government touts progress in 1938

FRANK BOYETT

YESTERDAY'S NEWS

Henderson city government was not only making great strides in 1938, it was also ensuring the public was aware of it.

Beginning in mid-February The Gleaner began publishing a regular Sunday column from the Henderson City Commission outlining progress that had been made or was in the works. The first column noted that the old city reservoir, located on the site of the Atkinson Park Medical Building, had recently been capped at the order of the state board of health.

But a lot of other projects were taking place in Atkinson Park. For instance, the March 6 column noted that the city was planning to partner with the federal Works Progress Administration to grow a community garden on 18 acres there, with the WPA providing the labor and the city the tools, seeds and other supplies.

The tomatoes would be squeezed as soon as they were ripe to provide juice for needy kids, while other vegetables would be stored for use during the coming winter to feed the hungry.

The project ran into some trouble, though. The May 29 column noted that even though the ground had been plowed and seeded, and the project had been approved by the WPA in Washington, D.C., it failed to get the OK of the WPA office in Louisville. The city decided to proceed, however, using labor provided by the Public Welfare Association.

The city also provided a surplus mule. "A familiar sight in Henderson for the last number of years, the old mule and dump cart will be discontinued April 1 and will be replaced by a pickup truck, which can accomplish many times the work that the old cart has been able to do," according to the March 27 column. "The old outfit will be transferred to the parks and used in collecting the leaves, limbs, etc. and the mule can also be used in the new garden project and in the mowing of the golf links."

One of the more significant projects the city undertook in mid-1938 was constructing the road through Atkinson Park, as well as paving Water Street/Merritt Drive. Part of that project involved building the plaza and rock wall on the downtown riverfront.

"For some time the mayor and both commissioners have longed to pave Water Street from Clay to Fifth, making a plaza from Second to Third, such as Evansville has," the March 6 column said, noting the commission was contemplating reinstituting a $3 automobile tax to help pay the city's share of the cost, most of which would be covered by the WPA.

"Water Street will never be paved and the plaza on the riverfront will be impossible unless done while the WPA is in existence."

Up to that point Merritt Drive ended at 12th Street. The city intended to build a dam across the ravine that ran between 12th Street and Methodist Hospital (now a parking lot), which would allow the street to be extended along the top of the dam.

Building the dam, however, turned out to be a very bad idea. It created a huge pool of stagnant water that fouled the neighborhood until it was drained in the mid-1950s. The area was then turned into a landfill for seven years, which the neighbors appreciated even less.

But paving Water Street and building the plaza was a pretty good idea. "The riverfront could be made beautiful instead of an eyesore," the commission said. The rock wall remained a feature of the downtown riverfront until 2000, and some of the rocks are incorporated into the fake entrance into Audubon Mill Park.

Another project that took place in 1938 was construction of the old log pavilion in Atkinson Park. I had always been under the impression that had been built in 1935, which apparently was when it had been first contemplated, but construction clearly took place in 1938. The city column from March 20 noted that a planned park beautification envisioned "tearing down of the old pavilion (which dated to about 1900) and the building of a new rustic log pavilion on the ridge just beyond the swimming pool."

The March 27 column noted that architect J. Alves Clore "has completed and handed in the necessary rough sketch of the building." The May 15 column noted that U.S. Sen. Alben Barkley had informed the city that the log pavilion project had been approved in Washington, D.C. for WPA funding.

But it wasn't just parks and streets that were getting attention. The entire Police Department got new uniforms and noted the improvement by having a group photograph taken on the steps of the police station, which was published in The Gleaner April 17.

The Fire Department also got some upgrades, which were badly needed because the Feb. 27 column noted the city had been in danger of having its fire rating reduced, which would have increased local fire insurance premiums. That prompted the city to install a V-8 motor in its outmoded Stutz firetruck and to replace the solid rubber tires on the Seagraves firetruck with pneumatic tires.

City mechanic Olan Hall, machinist Frank Porter and chief engineer Spurgeon Wells shoehorned the engine into the old Stutz, and had to fabricate "shafts, joints, crossmembers and all types of parts and fittings," the April 3 column said. Installing pneumatic tires on the Seagraves truck also required replacing the steering mechanism.

"We now have four complete firefighting trucks in perfect condition," according to the May 8 column.

100 YEARS AGO

The Anderson Box and Basket Co. won a contract from the U.S. Post Office Department to provide 600 containers that could be used in the new parcel post service, according to the March 6, 1913, edition of The Gleaner. "If they give good service, which it is sure they will, the local firm will in all probability receive orders for many thousands."

50 YEARS AGO

The final wall fell of the old Kentucky Bakery building at Second and Elm streets, which was being razed to make way for the current Old National Bank building on that site, The Gleaner reported March 8, 1963.

The bakery had satisfied Henderson's sweet tooth more than five decades. The building that formerly stood on that site, which burned in 1920, once housed the Mecca Bar, one of Henderson's more high-toned drinking establishments, and the upper story was Liederkranz Hall, where W.C. Handy once worked as a janitor.

25 YEARS AGO

Henderson Fiscal Court granted a cable television franchise to Ervin Cable of Morganfield, which planned to extend service into southern Henderson County, including the city of Corydon, The Gleaner reported March 2, 1988.

Cuomo waffles on gas drilling plan

By Michael Gormley
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. – New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo came as close as he ever has to approving fracking last month, laying out a limited drilling plan for as many as 40 gas wells before changing course to await the findings of a new study after discussions with environmentalist and former brother-in-law Robert F. Kennedy Jr., several people familiar with his thinking told The Associated Press.

The turning point, which could delay a decision for up to a year or longer, came in a series of phone calls with Kennedy. The two discussed a new health study on the hydraulic fracturing drilling method that could be thorough enough to trump all others in a debate that has split New York for five years.

"I think the issue suddenly got simple for him," Kennedy told the AP, then went on to paraphrase Cuomo in their discussions: "'If it's causing health problems, I really don't want it in New York state. And if it's not causing health problems, we should figure out a way we can do it.'"

Kennedy and two other people close to Cuomo, who spoke to the AP only on condition of anonymity because Cuomo is carefully guarding his discussions on the issue, confirmed the outlines of the plan the governor was considering to allow 10 to 40 test wells in economically depressed southern New York towns that want drilling and the jobs it promises. The plan would allow the wells to operate under intense monitoring by the state to see if fracking should continue or expand.

They all said it was the closest Cuomo has come in his two years in office to deciding on whether to green-light drilling.

The state has had a moratorium on the process since 2008 while other states in the gas-rich Marcellus Shale formation, such as Pennsylvania, have seen local economies boom as drilling rigs have sprouted up.

Cuomo issued a brief statement Saturday through a spokesman saying that the state departments of environmental conservation and health are "in the process of making a determination with respect to the safety and health impacts of fracking.

"After, and only after, they conclude their work will the state's position be determined," Cuomo spokesman Josh Vlasto said.

Rescuers end search for body in sinkhole

By Tamara Lush
Associated Press

SEFFNER, Fla. – The effort to find the body of a man who was swallowed by a sinkhole under his Florida home was called off Saturday and crews planned to begin demolishing the four-bedroom house.

The 20-foot-wide opening of the sinkhole is almost completely covered by the house, and rescuers feared it would collapse on them if they tried to search for Jeff Bush, 37. Crews were testing the unstable ground surrounding the home and evacuated two neighboring homes as a precaution.

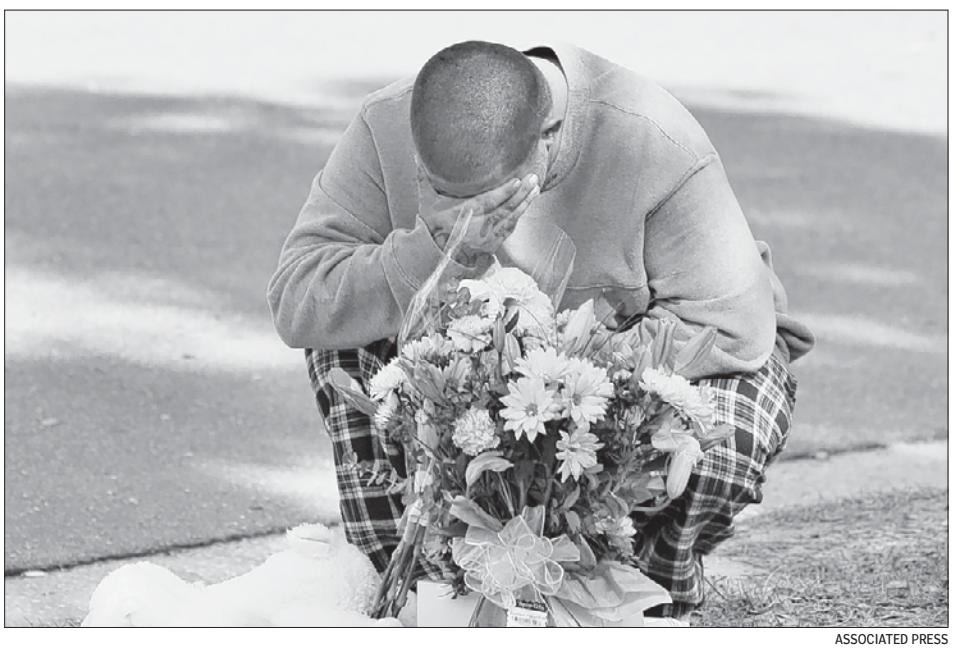

Hillsborough County Administrator Mike Merrill said heavy equipment would be brought in to begin the demolition Sunday morning.

"At this point it's really not possible to recover the body," Merrill said, later adding "we're dealing with a very unusual sinkhole."

Jessica Damico, spokeswoman for Hillsborough County Fire Rescue, said the demolition equipment would be placed on what they believe is solid ground and reach onto the property to pull apart the house. The crew will try pulling part of the house away from the sinkhole intact so some heirlooms and mementos can be retrieved.

Bush was in his bedroom Thursday night in Seffner — a suburb 15 miles east of downtown Tampa — when the earth opened and took him and everything else in his room. Five others in the house escape unharmed.

Experts say thousands of sinkholes form yearly in Florida because of the state's unique geography, though most are small and deaths rarely occur.

INDIANA

Immigrant's lawyers aim to bar baby pics

INDIANAPOLIS – Lawyers for a Chinese immigrant whose premature baby died after the pregnant woman tried to kill herself by eating rat poison are asking an Indianapolis judge to bar the infant's autopsy photographs from her murder trial.

Bei Bei Shuai's attorneys said in documents filed Friday that the photos are overly gory and inflammatory.

They say a medical examiner from Delaware who reviewed the photographs called them "appallingly unprofessional."

Shuai's lawyers also renewed their call for the judge to dismiss murder charges against her. That motion comes a few weeks after Judge Sheila Carlisle barred key testimony from Shuai's trial.

Prosecutors said this week they wouldn't appeal that ruling.

Shuai attempted suicide by eating rat poison in December 2010, when she was eight months pregnant.

NEW YORK

Ex-inmate found breaking into ... jails

NEW YORK – Most people who've done time can't wait to get away. But this week, New York City authorities accused one former inmate of sneaking back in.

Yonkers resident Matthew Matagrano, 36, was arraigned in Manhattan on Saturday on charges that he impersonated a Department of Correction investigator.

Officials say that for at least a week, Matagrano used phony credentials to get into multiple city lockups, including Rikers Island and the Manhattan Detention Center, where he mingled with inmates for hours.

A criminal complaint said that when questioned, Matagrano had admitted to arriving at the jail at around 3:30 p.m. and gaining entry by showing a gold shield and saying he was an investigator from the department's intelligence unit.

According to the complaint, he stayed until 11 p.m., giving cigarettes to inmates and smoking with them in a common area. He is also charged with stealing a radio from an office while inside.

Matagrano has a rap sheet that includes a conviction for sodomy and sexual abuse. He's on the state's sex offender registry.

It's not clear why he wanted to get into jails, but he had previously been caught posing as a Board of Education worker to enter two schools and rifle through student files.

British man affirms Valle's chat was fake

NEW YORK – A British man who chatted online with a New York City police officer about kidnapping and cooking women says the talk was "all fantasy."

Dale Bolinger spoke briefly with reporters after his arrest in Canterbury, England, where he was being investigated in connection with the ongoing trial of NYPD Officer Gilberto Valle.

Valle is accused of conspiring to capture and eat several women. But his lawyers say the supposed plots were all fantasies that he shared with other fetishists, and that he had no intention of carrying them out.

Bolinger has told newspapers including the New York Post that none of that talk was real. But he calls himself "an idiot" for his behavior.

SYRIA

Assad to remain in power until 2014

DAMASCUS – Iran and Syria condemned a U.S. plan to assist rebels fighting to topple President Bashar Assad and signaled the Syrian leader intends to stay in power at least until 2014 presidential elections.

The remarks came Saturday against the backdrop of a strategic victory for the regime as the military regained control over a string of villages along a key highway to open a potential supply route in Syria's heavily contested north.

The reversal of gains has the potential to change the outcome of the battle in Aleppo, where government troops and rebels have been locked in a stalemate for months.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry announced Thursday that the Obama administration was giving an additional $60 million in assistance to Syria's political opposition and would provide nonlethal aid directly to the rebels.

KENYA

Quotes upend presidential vote

NAIROBI – Kenya's top two presidential candidates held their final rallies before large and raucous crowds Saturday, a day of political attacks and denials following published comments attributed to the prime minister that election violence could be worse than in 2007-08.

Monday's vote is the first nationwide election since Kenya's December 2007 vote devolved into tribe-on-tribe violence that killed more than 1,000 people.

The Financial Times in a story Saturday quoted Prime Minister Raila Odinga as saying he knows his opponents are planning to rig the vote, and "I have warned them the consequences may be worse than last time round. The people will not stomach another rigging."

Odinga denied making the statement and told a stadium full of supporters that the story was a "total fabrication."

LIBYA

Official: Detainees to be deported

TRIPOLI – A Libyan security official said 50 Egyptians are being charged with illegally entering and working in the country and will be deported.

A video circulated this week on social networking sites purportedly showing a group of Christian Egyptians with shaved heads and a bearded young man in a military jacket who said nearly 100 Coptic Egyptians were being held for allegedly spreading Christianity.

The Egyptian government says Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Amr Kamel resolved the issue over the detainees on Saturday with his Libyan counterpart.

Fire damages tower under construction

DUBAI – Dubai police say a major fire broke out in a high-rise building under construction near the world's tallest skyscraper, but there were no immediate reports of injuries.

The blaze Saturday sent a column of gray smoke over the cluster of towers surrounding the landmark Burj Khalifa spire.

A statement by Dubai police says a short circuit apparently touched off what it called a "huge fire." The police say more than 20 workers were evacuated and the flames were brought under control.

Kerry says Egypt needs compromise

By Aya Batrawy
Associated Press

CAIRO – Egypt's bickering government and opposition need to overcome their differences to create "a sense of political and economic viability" if the country is to thrive as a democracy, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry said Saturday.

He urged them to compromise for the good of the country.

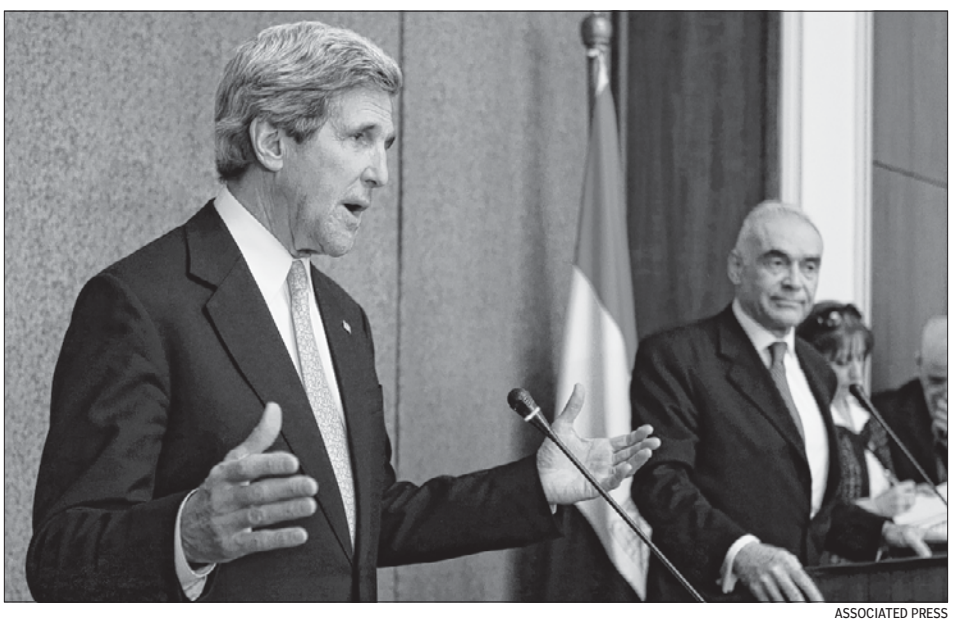

In meetings with Egypt's foreign minister and opposition politicians, some of whom plan to boycott upcoming parliamentary elections, Kerry said an agreement on economic reforms to seal a $4.8 billion International Monetary Fund loan package was critical. Closing the IMF deal also will unlock significant U.S. assistance promised by President Barack Obama last year.

But Kerry's message to the liberal and secular opposition may have been blunted, as only six of the 11 guests invited by the U.S. Embassy turned up to see the top American diplomat at a group meeting, and three of those six said they still intended to boycott the April polls, according to participants.

Undaunted, Kerry told reporters he had heard great passion from those who did attend and was convinced they wanted to work in Egypt's best interests.

But he acknowledged the difficulty in overcoming the deep differences. He said he would make that point to President Mohammed Morsi, an Islamist from the Muslim Brotherhood, in their talks Sunday.

"I say with both humility and with a great deal of respect that getting there requires a genuine give-and-take among Egypt's political leaders and civil society groups, just as we are continuing to struggle with that in our own country," Kerry said.

Chad's army chief: Troops killed terrorist

By Dany Padire
Associated Press

N'DJAMENA, Chad – Chad's military chief announced late Saturday that his troops deployed in northern Mali had killed Moktar Belmoktar, the terrorist who orchestrated the attack on a natural gas plant in Algeria that left 36 foreigners dead.

The French military, which is leading the offensive against al-Qaida-linked rebels in Mali, said they could not immediately confirm the information.

Local officials in Kidal, the northern town that is being used as the base for the military operation, cast doubt on the assertion, saying Chadian officials are attempting to score a public relations victory to make up for the significant losses in recent days.

Known as the "one-eyed," Belmoktar's profile soared after the mid-January attack and mass hostage-taking on a huge Algerian gas plant. His purported death comes a day after Chad's president said his troops had killed Abou Zeid, the other main al-Qaida commander operating in northern Mali.

If both deaths are confirmed, it would mean that the international intervention in Mali had succeeded in decapitating two of the pillars of al-Qaida in the Sahara.

"Chad's armed forces in Mali have completely destroyed a base used by jihadists and narco-traffickers in the Adrar and Ifoghas mountains" of northern Mali, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Zakaria Ngobongue said in a televised statement on state-owned National Chadian Television. "The provisional toll is as follows: Several terrorists killed, including Moktar Belmoktar."

The French military moved into Mali on Jan. 11 to push back militants linked to Belmoktar and Abou Zeid and other extremist groups who had imposed harsh Islamic rule in the north of the vast country and who were seen as an international terrorist threat.

France is trying to rally other African troops to help in the military campaign, since Mali's military is weak and poor. Chadian troops have offered the most robust reinforcement.

In Paris, French military spokesman Col. Thierry Burkhard said that he had "no information" on the possibility that Belmoktar was dead. The Foreign Ministry refused to confirm or deny the report.

One of nation's oldest teachers retires at 94

By Christina Hoag
Associated Press

Rose Gilbert

LOS ANGELES — Rose Gilbert wanted to be a schoolteacher since she was in the first grade and was inspired by the teacher who taught her to read and write.

Gilbert carried out that childhood dream with a rare commitment — she retired last week at age 94 after a 63-year teaching career in the Los Angeles Unified School District.

"I'm going to be 95. I looked in the mirror and said, 'I better do it now before I get too old,'" she joked. "I didn't want to leave, but I didn't want to be carried out on a stretcher."

It's unclear if Gilbert is the oldest full-time classroom teacher among the nation's teaching corps of more than 3 million, but she certainly ranks among the most senior. She started teaching in the 1940s, took a break and then returned to the classroom in 1956.

In 1961, she joined the staff at the brand new high school opening in the well-heeled Pacific Palisades section of Los Angeles and remained there until Feb. 22, passing along her passion for poetry and literature to generations of students. Some of her former students are now teachers at Palisades Charter High School, who say she'll be sorely missed.

"She is utterly unique," said English teacher Holly Korbonski, who had Gilbert as her English teacher in 1978. "We're all sort of bereft, honestly."

Korbonski remembers Gilbert customizing reading lists for each student. She assigned Korbonski to read "The Great Gatsby," among other works. The F. Scott Fitzgerald novel is now Korbonski's specialty.

"She was prophetic," Korbonski said. "Her gifts to students continue to grow and magnify through life."

Do You Suffer with Depression?

Most people have felt sad or depressed at times. But when feelings of intense sadness – including symptoms of fatigue, difficulty concentrating, feelings of worthlessness/guilt and sleep/appetite disturbances – last for days to weeks, your depression may be something more than sadness. It may very well be clinical depression – a treatable medical condition.

If you or someone you know is currently taking medication for depression, yet wish their medication would help them more, you may qualify for a national clinical research trial conducted at Deaconess Clinic. Participation includes study-related physical evaluation and study medication at no cost; and compensation for participation. You must be at least 18 years old to qualify.

Health insurance is not required for participation.

To see if you qualify or to receive more information, please call the Research InfoLine at 812-474-7184 or toll free at 1-877-654-0311.

Ongoing raffle supports Trooper Island

Gleaner staff

State police are offering the public a chance to win a 2013 Chevrolet Camaro ISS Coupe.

Kentucky State Police troopers and officers with the Commercial Vehicle Enforcement division will be selling raffle tickets for $10 a piece for the vehicle with a red metallic exterior and black interior, a news release said.

Proceeds will support Trooper Island, which is a summer camp for underprivileged youth.

State police are selling raffle tickets for a chance to win a 2013 Chevrolet Camaro ISS Coupe.

Some of the car's features include a 6.2 liter V8 dual overhead cam engine with 400 horsepower and a six-speed automatic transmission that uses Active Fuel Management for a 24-miles-per-gallon highway rating, officials said.

In government crash testing, the Camaro ISS Coupe earned a five-star overall safety rating from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, a news release said.

The Camaro is equipped with a rear spoiler, 20-inch aluminum wheels, front seat and full-length side curtain air bags, four-wheel, antilock disc brakes, electric assist power steering, theft deterrent and battery run down systems, power windows, a nine-speaker Boston Acoustics audio system, telescoping steering wheel with audio controls, rear-vision parking assist and camera system, six-way driver and passenger power seat adjustment and Chevrolet MyLink, an advanced infotainment system that integrates select phones via wireless technology for hassle-free communication on the go.

Tickets are available from any trooper, commercial vehicle enforcement officer or at any of the 16 KSP posts located throughout the state. Only 20,000 tickets will be sold.

The winning ticket will be drawn on Aug. 25 at the Kentucky State Fair.

Angel Mounds hosting farming fest

Demonstrations, presentations set for Saturday-Sunday event

Gleaner staff

A spring festival celebrating the history of farming is set for Saturday and Sunday, March 9-10, at Angel Mounds State Historic Site in Evansville.

Every spring, early Native Americans planted seeds of corn, squash and other edibles in this fertile crescent of the Ohio River Valley.

While most farm festivities celebrate fall's bountiful harvest, Angel Mounds is honoring the dawn of both the season and this local legacy.

Spring Farm Fest will feature demonstrations, presentations and hands-on activities relating to farming throughout the centuries. Starting with prehistory, visitors will learn about Native American agriculture, from gardening tools and planting to processing and storage.

To expand their understanding of Evansville's first permanent settlement, guests will also have the opportunity to board a hayride for a guided site tour.

Beyond a prehistoric context, event features include lye soap making, candle dipping, corn grinding and shelling, wool spinning, quilting, rope making, blacksmithing and more.

Youngsters can take barrel train rides, make butter in a jar, compete in potato sack races and peddle tractor pulls. Guests will have the opportunity to taste traditional farm fare with free samples of apple butter, cornbread, bean soup, smoked meat and apple cider.

Hours for Spring Farm Fest are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Angel Mounds State Historic Site was a thriving ancient metropolis for Mississippian Indians more than 500 years ago. Today, it is an important site for excavation and research on one of Indiana's native cultures.

For more information, call 812-853-3956 or visit indianamuseum.org/angel_mounds.

A Personal Perspective On Serving Our Residents, Families & The Community As a Whole

I was recently asked my favorite part of being the administrator of Colonial. Without hesitation I told them it was the residents and families I get to work with each day. I'm greeted with a "Hey Big Guy" each morning as I walk through the door and a "Don't forget to come back" as I leave for the day. My goal is for Colonial to be a family atmosphere, and I truly believe it is. I am getting ready to start my third year back at Colonial and the support the community of Henderson has shown us since I have been here has been great. The people at Methodist Hospital, area home health agencies, local doctors and the community of Henderson as a whole are truly what continue to make Colonial Assisted Living a success.

We want to continue to serve the area and people that have been so supportive to us. With that in mind, we are in the process of adding eight of the largest apartments we have. This will bring our total apartments to 69, and we don't plan on stopping there! I do feel truly blessed to be here with the staff and residents and am so excited about what the future holds. As always, feel free to contact me if you have any questions about assisted living or need any information about resources we work with.

Thank you Henderson for all you do for us!

Sincerely,

typewritten pages were "We Must Be Worthy of Our Times" and "Why I Am A Democrat."

Donnie also successfully bid on photographs and other collectibles that featured Jackie Kennedy as well as the president.

His favorite item is a picture showing JFK meeting a group of nuns on Feb. 18, 1960. It's special to Donnie because he and Kennedy shared the Catholic religion and because Feb. 18 is Donnie's birthday.

If he could have any single thing from the auction that filled the John McInnis Auctioneers facility and drew telephone/Internet bids from around the world, it would have been the pen used by the 35th president to authorize the military blockade of Cuba in October, 1962 when the Cuban missile crisis put America on the brink of nuclear war.

Donnie was prepared to pay as much as $11,000 for the pen, which sold for $24,000.

He points out that virtually everything in the auction went for prices that far exceeded expectations.

He's still amazed that Kennedy's Air Force One brown leather bomber jacket brought $570,000 from an unidentified phone bidder. Everyone in the gallery "was gasping," Donnie said.

The jacket had been anticipated to go for $20,000 to $40,000.

Donnie, who owned the popular "Uncle Mark's Popcorn" in Waverly until the plant was destroyed by fire last year, had an unexpected birthday present in Amesbury.

As he discovered that morning after getting only a few hours' sleep following the auction that started at 11 a.m. on Sunday and concluded at 5:30 a.m. Monday, a photo of him holding up his auction ID number was on the front page of the Amesbury Daily News.

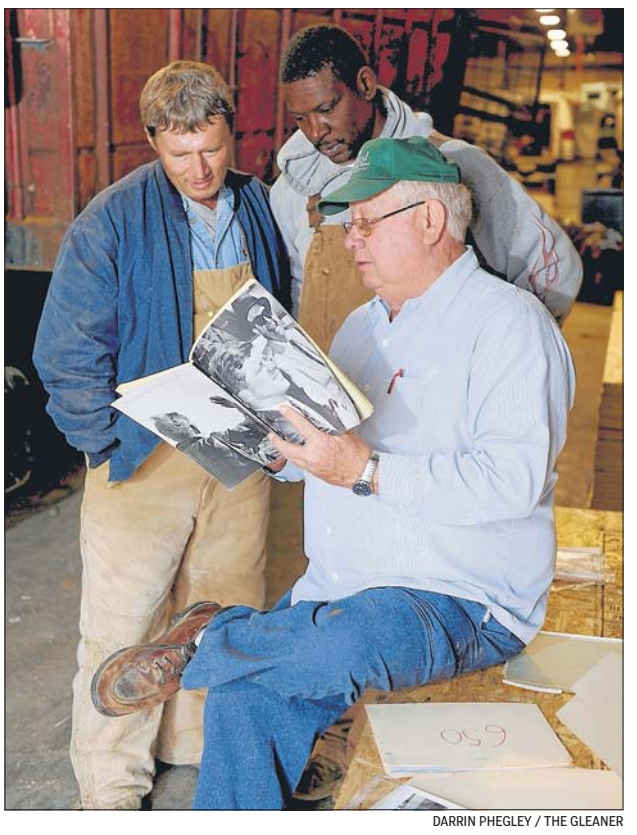

This was his first expedition to buy Kennedy items, but he has visited the president's grave at Arlington National Cemetery.

He believes that had Kennedy lived, the conflict in Vietnam would never have escalated to all out warfare. He also salutes JFK for his views on civil rights and his courage in forcing Russia to back down and dismantle the nuclear weapons facilities it had constructed in Cuba.

Donnie, who is single and has a son, Kyle, said he expects to eventually donate much of his Kennedy collection to the Camp Breckinridge Museum in Union County.

But first he'll cherish these pieces of history and their connection to a president who died far too soon.

was no vote or motion to direct legal counsel reflected in the board's official minutes.

The trial court ruled last April that since there was no motion and vote in open session to allow legal counsel to file a challenge, the filing was unauthorized and the school board's challenge should be dismissed. The Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's decision in a ruling issued earlier this month.

The school board, which has three new members sworn in earlier this year, has indicated it's unlikely to pursue a further appeal, Kemp said. The board has a 30-day window to request a Kentucky Supreme Court review.

"If the board does nothing, then the appeal is just simply over," he said.

Plans to renovate the southeast Webster County High School wing to make a junior high school that would house seventh- and eighth-graders are not over, Kemp said. The junior high would move approximately 330 students from the district's four elementary schools into one centralized location.

The board is awaiting the Kentucky Department of Education's approval of the district's submitted documents before bids can be placed for contractors. Construction is anticipated to begin in the summer and conclude in late spring 2014, Kemp said.

Webster hopes to open a junior high by the start of the 2014-15 school year.

board chairman.

"It was a total surprise to me," he said, noting that his wife of 53 years was part of the surprise. That's appropriate, McGee said, because nothing he's accomplished in his career would have been possible without her.

"Those people out at Baskett are the sweetest people on the face of the Earth," McGee said late last week as he contemplated a move to the next stage of his life. "They're not afraid to say they love you and they're not afraid to show it. I'm going to miss the people."

He doesn't know what the next stage will bring, but the minister has always risen to a new challenge, both in his profession and in his hobbies, one of which has been clock repair.

In his campus ministry years following graduation from Vanderbilt University Divinity School, he built relationships that have withstood the passing years and allowed him to see the young people he ministered to become productive adults.

"I feel like a good number have really done well," McGee said, noting that some even still recall specific sermons he delivered to them. In one notable one, he passed a cornucopia and asked them for something in their possession with special significance. He got back Green stamps, rubber bands, paper clips, medicine, photos, a letter written by a first-grade teacher, a very expensive ring and even a banana. One by one, their stories were revealed.

He presided over more than 400 weddings during his ministry, striving to make each one unique, and after 41 years one couple still calls him every year on their anniversary to say thanks.

But there came a time, he said, when he knew it was time to move on. Campus lifestyles were changing. That was when Methodist Hospital administrator Ron Chapman contacted him about coming to Henderson to be a chaplain.

In those seven years, he served the staff as a counselor as well ministering to the patient population. If he was in the building, he said, he was always called to the emergency room when an ambulance arrived.

"I saw some pretty ugly sights in those years," he said.

The FRC job at South Heights Elementary took him back to working with youth, and Baskett Christian Church took him back to the pulpit for 24 years.

He doesn't know what he's going to say today in that pulpit as he says goodbye.

"I hope I can get across how much they've meant to me," he said. "I hope I can make it through it. It's going to be emotional."

that boys can do."

Vaughn said she was excited about portraying Earhart, but scared people were going to push her button repeatedly. Each time a student's button was pushed, they had to recite one fact about their icon.

The students had to come up with 10 facts, including information on why the icon was famous, how they died and what they did during their lifetime to imprint their legacy.

"He was kind to others and freed the slaves," said Ashton Todd, 9, about President Abraham Lincoln.

Todd said he chose Lincoln because he liked that he gave speeches and he had also once visited Gettysburg, where president made his famous address. Todd was sans beard and his-paper stuffed stovepipe hat for rehearsal Thursday afternoon, but had on an overcoat reminiscent of the president's black attire.

Costume played an important part of getting the third-graders into character.

Her blonde hair plaited in braids and wearing a blue dress and boots fit for a prairie girl, Lilly Green, 9, was ready to rattle off facts about children's author Laura Ingalls Wilder at moment's notice. Green is a fan of the "Little House" book series and television show and parlayed her interest to research Wilder's life for the project.

Dylon Moore, 9, wasn't sure whom he wanted to portray, but after a little Internet surfing came across Eddie Rickenbacker, the World War I air ace, race car driver, automotive designer and longtime head of Eastern Air Lines.

"I like to make stuff and he did a lot of interesting things and that's why I wanted to pick him," said Moore, who wore a blue dress shirt, tie and slacks to play Rickenbacker.

Farmer is already thinking about making the wax museum a tradition.

"We hope this is the first annual wax museum," she said.

BURIALS

burial — so long as the person was truly indigent. The city has budgeted $3,000 for up to 10 indigent burials this fiscal year, and another $2,750 for concrete grave containers, which prevent the casket from collapsing.

"The families do not come to us; they go to the funeral home," said city Parks and Recreation Director Emily Gilliam, who is also responsible for city cemeteries. She said the city has had one or two this year, although some years there have been as many as 10 indigent funerals.

Once the funeral home applies for indigent relief, she said, a special committee made up of her, Finance Director Robert Gunter and City Clerk Carolyn Williams take a close look at the family's finances to determine inability to pay.

The city's official policy, which has been in effect since mid-2002, says the committee's decision is final; there is no appeal process.

If approved, "my department decides what day the burial will be," Gilliam said. "We won't have it on a weekend and pull people in on overtime for that."

The city opens the grave, which will usually be located in lots C904 through C914 at Fairmont Cemetery, back near the Henderson County Detention Center. The city also pays the funeral home $300 for a cheap casket, provides a concrete grave container, and closes the grave.

"If someone is buried as an indigent (survivors) have to pay the city's costs before they can put up a marker," Gilliam said.

"The funeral homes do their very best to work out arrangements with people. Henderson is really good about people coming together and helping families out. Henderson's unique in that respect."

The coroner pointed out that the city's policy is quite generous, considering state law makes county governments responsible for indigent burials.

"The city's been real good about working with families and indigents," Farmer said. "Some people you really feel sorry for. With the economy the way it is, it's harder for families to take care of their loved ones. They want to, but can't afford to. I would kind of like for the city and the county to get together and work out something."

The problem, Farmer said, is that county government does not own a cemetery, so the amount of assistance it can provide is limited. "Whenever I have (an indigent death) I always hope it's in the city limits. I have to deal with these families."

Sue Baker, administrative assistant to the county judge-executive, said the county's rules are pretty similar to the city's. "The person cannot have any life insurance. They cannot have any means at all of paying for their funeral."

A funeral home must apply to receive the $500 the county provides. "Normally, we try to run that through the magistrate over the district in which the person lived," Baker said. "We don't have many calls."

"I can't remember the last time we had one," said County Treasurer Becky Carroll. The county budgets only $2,000 a year for indigent burials.

That won't go far, the coroner noted. "Funeral homes tell me you can't buy a cloth-covered, flat-top casket for $500 these days. That's as bare as it gets."

Pair of crashes results in 6 deaths, 5 injuries

The Associated Press

ELIZABETHTOWN — Kentucky State Police said Saturday they were investigating whether distracted driving caused a tractor-trailer to plow into an SUV carrying eight people, killing six and possibly triggering a serious crash on the opposite side of the highway.

The truck driver is "telling us that he saw the vehicle that was in front of him and he hit the brakes and he didn't hit them in time," Master Trooper Norman Chaffins said. " ... There was a reason for that and we're trying to figure out what the reason was."

The late-morning crash was followed 15 minutes later by a multi-vehicle crash on the opposite side of Interstate 65 that injured three people. The site was just 15 miles from where 11 people died in 2010 when a tractor-trailer crossed the median and hit a van carrying a Mennonite family. Ten people in the van were killed along with the truck driver and the National Transportation Safety Board determined the truck driver was distracted by his cell phone.

Chaffins said despite snow flurries, weather was not a factor in Saturday's crashes. He said police were also looking into the truck driver's logs and had taken blood tests.

The six killed were identified as members of an extended family from Marion, Wis.

They were identified as James Gollnow, 62, and his wife, Barbara Gollnow, 62; Marion Champnise, 92, a friend; Sarina Gollnow, 18, relationship unknown; and foster children Gabriel Zumig, 10, and Soledad Smith, 8.

The two survivors were also foster children.

HOPKINSVILLE – Hopkinsville unwrapped a 3-2 zone it hadn't used all season to repeat as Second Region champions.

The fourth-ranked Tigers (31-4) beat Henderson County 59-46 to return to the state tournament and keep the region title in the Eighth District for the 12th straight year.

After the Colonels successfully navigated Hopkinsville's man-to-man defense early in the game, the Tigers fell back into a 3-2 zone that Henderson County couldn't solve until the contest was out of reach.

"That's the first time we've played it. We worked on two or three defenses we haven't run all year. We work on them a little bit every day in practice and if we need it, we've got it," Hopkinsville coach Tim Haworth said. "We decided before the game if they beat our pressure, we're going straight to it. We saw it was working so we stayed with it."

After leading 12-10 at the end of the first quarter, Henderson County couldn't connect from the field against the zone. The Colonels made just 2-of-11 shots in the second quarter and 2-of-10 in the third.

"When you're that long, you can really pack it in and clog up gaps any time you try to penetrate in the middle," Henderson County coach Tyler Smithhart said. "They got hands on everything that we threw inside. We attack teams baseline and drop off in the middle. They pin you right under the glass and they have the length to block shots and alter shots. They did that a lot tonight."

The Tigers had eight blocked shots, including three by guard Jordan Majors.

The Colonels had their last lead at 14-12 with 6:12 to go in the second quarter. Over the next 18 minutes, Hopkinsville put together a 26-11 run to lead 40-25 with 4:27 to go.

The Tigers had their largest lead at 44-27 with 3:01 remaining when Henderson County started raining down a barrage of 3-pointers. The Colonels hit six treys, including four by Rick Armstead, in the final 2:48 and got back within six with 1:15 to go.

"That's a sign of great team, great coach and great competitors that never give up. I have much respect for Coach Smithhart, his staff and his team," said Haworth, who has won two region titles in three seasons as the Tigers' head coach.

Hopkinsville, which was 30-of-39 from the free throw line for the game, put the game away by hitting eight straight foul shots and 11-of-13 in the final 1:11.

Henderson County was 9-of-22 from 3-point range for the game but didn't relax on its long-range shooting until the game was nearly out of reach.

"I give credit to our guys for playing really gutsy down the stretch," Smithhart said. "Starting in the second quarter, we rushed a few shots because we were tentative. We weren't sure we were supposed to shoot it."

"We said all along that we had nothing to lose in this game, but at times we played like we had everything to lose. Instead of being relaxed and letting them fly when we had looks, we were tentative and played a little timid," said Smithhart, who ends his first season as Henderson County's coach with a 26-6 record.

Armstead, who was 6-of-10 from 3-point land, led Henderson County with 18 points in his final game but was the only Colonel in double figures.

"This is the type of game where guys are not themselves. I think you saw some of that tonight," Smithhart said. "In a big moment or a big game, it's hard to get over the nerves and butterflies. I think that got to some of them tonight. Our job as coaches is to help the maturity process so they are prepared for those situations."

Point guard Tra Edwards was 6-of-9 from the field, including 2-of-3 on 3-pointers, to lead Hopkinsville with 20 points. He had eight of those points as the Tigers took control with an 11-2 run to close the second quarter.

"He's been tremendous all year. He could score when he wants to but he chooses to run the show, get us in our offense and do those kind of things," Haworth said.

Jaqualis Matlock scored 17 points, was 11-of-12 from the free-throw line and had a team-high nine rebounds for the Tigers. Majors added 13 points on 6-of-8 shooting from the line.

Hopkinsville had a 29-26 rebounding advantage with Kaleb Duckworth leading Henderson County with 11 boards.

Henderson County has now lost in eight straight regional championship games since last winning a region title in 1999.

The Colonels have been eliminated by the eventual region champions each of the last nine seasons.

Hopkinsville will face Eighth Region champion South Oldham (23-7) in the first round of the state tournament Wednesday at 7 p.m. at Rupp Arena in Lexington.

South Oldham advanced with a 58-48 win over Oldham County on Friday.

Arkansas' Coty Clarke (4) lays the ball up to score against Kentucky's Kyle Wiltjer (33) and Archie Goodwin (10) during the second half of their game on Saturday in Fayetteville, Ark. Arkansas defeated Kentucky 73-60.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – Coty Clarke is feeling more and more at home toward the end of his first season at Arkansas.

Clarke did a lot of everything when the Razorbacks needed it the most on Saturday — finishing with 14 points and a career-high 12 rebounds as Arkansas did its best to make a renewed case for an NCAA tournament bid with a convincing 73-60 win over Kentucky.

The junior-college transfer had six assists and three steals for the Razorbacks (18-11, 9-7 Southeastern Conference), which improved to 17-1 at home. Clarke is now averaging 12 points and 6.8 rebounds over his last five games and the 6-foot-7 forward showed off his comfort level and versatility on Saturday.

"It's become real comfortable for me," Clarke said. "My confidence, it's sky-high, I guess right now, you could say."

Arkansas' only loss in Bud Walton Arena this season came to then-No. 6 Syracuse on Nov. 30 and it is now 33-4 at home under second-year coach Mike Anderson. Marshawn Powell had 15 points and BJ Young added 13 for the Razorbacks, which snapped a two-game losing streak with the win.

Arkansas native Archie Goodwin led the Wildcats (20-9, 11-5) with 14 points, while Willie Cauley-Stein had 13 points and 10 rebounds and Ryan Harrow added 10 points.

After a tight first half, Arkansas took control early in the second and never let off the intensity against the defending national champions.

A sellout crowd of 18,139 in Bud Walton Arena arrived early and thrived on a serious of highlights for the Razorbacks — particularly as they pushed the lead to as many as 15 points in the second half.

An 11-0 run early in the second half — capped by a 3-pointer and three-point play by Powell — gave Arkansas a 43-31 lead and put it well on its way to a much-needed win if the school hopes to reach the NCAA tournament for the first time since 2008.

"I was concerned about how we would respond coming off a tough loss on the road at LSU," Anderson said. "But I thought we came out and we did what we normally do here, we defended.

"We tried to make the game as chaotic as we could, and I thought that was the difference in the game."

Kentucky, which had won three straight, closed with within 45-40 after a 3-pointer by Alex Poythress, but that was as close as it would get.

Henderson County and Webster County face familiar challenges Monday night as the district rivals try to advance to the Second Region championship game.

The Lady Colonels (24-2) will meet Madisonville (16-16) in the 6 p.m. semifinal. Though the teams played once during the regular season, the teams' familiarity comes mostly from their coaching staffs.

Madisonville head coach Brent Gibson is the son of Henderson County assistant Phil Gibson. One of his assistant coaches is longtime Henderson County coach Tom Fisher, who was on Phil Gibson's Henderson County coaching staff for 12 years.

"It's definitely strange to see your father sitting on the other bench," said Brent Gibson, who is in his first season as Madisonville's coach. "But it's just like when I play golf against him, I'm going to do my best to beat him. I know the feeling will be reciprocated. We love each other to death but we both want to win. The bad news is that only one Gibson will be going on the regional final."

Both head coaches said there will be no surprises on the court.

"We run a lot of the same things that Dad ran with Coach Fisher at Henderson County. We do that because it works," Gibson said.

The Lady Maroons, who advanced to the semifinals with a 63-35 win over Livingston Central on Wednesday, still have lost six of their last nine games.

"We had been battling injuries and people missing for different reasons. In the second half of the district final with Caldwell, we finally got going on all cylinders," Gibson said.

"They're much improved and have some different personnel in there. From what we saw (Wednesday), we're definitely going to have our hands full," Henderson County coach Jeff Haile said.

The Lady Colonels won the regular-season meeting with Madisonville 62-41 on Jan. 17 in Henderson. Ellie Fruit scored 21 points, while DeAsia Outlaw had 13 points and 10 rebounds.

"We'll have to execute a lot better offensively than we did last time," Haile said.

Punkin McNary and Adarian Gray average 13 and 12 points respectively for the Lady Maroons.

In the 7:30 p.m. semifinal, Webster County (23-5) will take on University Heights (23-7) in a rematch of the Second Region All A Classic championship game. The Lady Trojans beat UHA 52-51 on a Bailey Townsend free throw with one second to play. Townsend was fouled on an offensive rebound with the game tied at 51.

"They'll be back to beat us so we have to play our heart out," Webster County junior guard Darrian McNary said.

Thursday's 57-42 win over Lyon County was the 12th straight since the All A loss to Webster for UHA.

"They're going to play aggressive and be a little personal after losing that game," Webster County coach Parker McCalister said. "They're going to be a tough team to beat."

DeNayia Holmes' 21 points led the Lady Blazers to their first regional tournament win in school history.

"We're writing history as we go," said Taylor Sparks, who is in his fourth season at UHA. "We had never had a winning season until last year. Now we've had back-to-back 20-win seasons. We won our first district championship and now we have our first win in the regional tournament."

"They are playing the best basketball in the region right now. Besides Henderson, UHA is by far the second best team in the region," McCalister said.

The Lady Blazers rely on their pressure defense led by guards Holmes and Le'Onzerrea Grubbs, who average around 16 points per game.

The presence of 6-foot-5 1/2 junior center Meg Starling makes for a difficult matchup. "She changes the game defensively," Sparks said

The championship game is set for Tuesday at 7 p.m. The winner will advance to next week's state tournament in Bowling Green and will meet the Eighth Region champion in the first round March 13 at 6:30 p.m. The semifinal matchups in the Eighth Region are Collins vs. Simon Kenton and Oldham County vs. second-ranked Anderson County.

Late rally lifts Cardinals to 58-53 win at Syracuse

By John Kekis
Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – When Louisville coach Rick Pitino threw off his coat, it was game-on.

Miffed by two straight fouls against Luke Hancock when the 10th-ranked Cardinals trailed No. 12 Syracuse by a point with time running out, Pitino stomped on the sidelines as he altered his courtside wardrobe and his team responded with a late spurt for a 58-53 victory Saturday, silencing another huge Carrier Dome crowd.

"We had a couple of real tough calls go against us and veteran teams don't let it bother you," Pitino said. "They dig in. It bothered me, but it didn't bother the players."

Cool under fire despite the two quick fouls, Hancock hit a 3-pointer from the left corner to break a 48-all tie with 50 seconds left as the Cardinals exacted a measure of revenge for a loss to the Orange earlier this season.

"It's big," said Hancock, who hit 4 of 5 from behind the arc for all of his points in the game. "This was like a tournament game. It was that kind of atmosphere. This prepares us well. It definitely gives us confidence going into the end of the season. We want to win out the rest of our games and this was another step."

It was the third straight loss for Syracuse (22-7, 10-6 Big East), which was humbled 57-46 in a loss to No. 7 Georgetown a week ago before a record Carrier Dome crowd of 35,012. That snapped the Orange's 38-game home winning streak, and they were beaten again, 74-71, at No. 22 Marquette on Monday night to drop into a tie in the Big East with Notre Dame behind the league-leading Hoyas, Louisville and Marquette.

Louisville (24-5, 12-4) snapped a three-game losing streak against Syracuse, and the Cardinals did it before a stunned crowd of 31,173. The victory moved Louisville into a tie with Marquette (21-7, 12-4), which beat Notre Dame, one-half game behind the Hoyas (22-4, 12-3), who played later Saturday.

Russ Smith led Louisville with 18 points and Gorgui Dieng finished with 11 points and 14 rebounds as the Cardinals overcame a poor offensive performance by point guard Peyton Siva. Siva failed to score, missing eight 3-pointers, but had four assists and no turnovers.

C.J. Fair had 19 points to lead the Orange, James Southerland added 13 and point guard Michael Carter-Williams 11.

Louisville's Chane Behanan, left, has the ball knocked away by Syracuse's Hakeem Christmas during the first half of their game in Syracuse, N.Y., on Saturday. Louisville won 58-53.

Syracuse, which trailed 23-19 at halftime, its fewest points in a first half this season, outrebounded Louisville 41-36 but was victimized by eight 3s and shot poorly again (20 of 56 for 35.7 percent). Senior guard Brandon Triche, one of the heroes in the win over Louisville in mid-January with 23 points, had just eight on this day, going 2 for 11 from the field and missing all three of his tries from long range. Syracuse's starting guards finished 5 of 21 overall and 1 of 7 on 3-pointers, while Triche had a game-high seven turnovers.

"We can't have him (Triche) play this way," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. "He works his tail off. He's a good teammate. He wants to win, but I don't like the way he's playing right now. I don't like the way we're playing. We need to get something offensively."

After Hancock swished a straight-on 3 for Louisville, Fair hit a spinning layup as Dieng fouled him but missed the free throw and Syracuse trailed 41-40 with 7:34 to go.

Louisville began to press and the strategy paid off with two straight turnovers. Southerland lost the ball off the dribble and Triche mishandled an inbounds pass. The Cardinals took advantage as Dieng sank two free throws and Hancock hit a 3 from the wing for a 47-40 lead at 5:35, the biggest edge by either team in the game.

Carter-Williams scored six straight points in a span of just over a minute to rally the Orange, hitting four free throws and a shot off the glass as Syracuse trailed 47-46 with 4:27 left. Fair's baseline jumper gave Syracuse the lead and Smith's free throw tied it at 48-all with 1:39 to go.

After Triche missed a baseline layup against Dieng, Hancock stole Triche's ensuing inbounds pass and Hancock drained his fourth 3 off a slick pass to the corner from Smith to break the tie. Smith then hit two free throws and Triche's turnover sealed the Orange's fate as the Cardinals hit 7 of 8 free throws in the final seconds.

"We had the lead. We just lost it at the end," Southerland said. "We just have to have the mentality that when we have the ball, we're not going to lose it. Unfortunately, we had some tough turnovers at the end of the game that definitely changed the outcome.

"We just have to forget about this game and move forward. This is stuff teams go through. The best thing about it is it's better to go through it now than in the tournament because you only have one chance then."

Syracuse beat Louisville 70-68 in mid-January in the final seconds when Carter-Williams stole a pass at the top of the key and raced the length of the court, slamming home a two-hander that Dieng couldn't contest and landing hard on his back underneath the backboard. A record crowd of 22,814 at the KFC Yum! Center saw Syracuse beat a No. 1 team for fourth time, and the Cardinals are still the only top-ranked team to lose at home this season.

The Louisville players said they weren't thinking revenge. They're just happy to be playing at a high level after their fifth straight win.

"It wasn't a revenge game. We did what we were supposed to do," Dieng said.

Next season's region tournaments will be much closer for Colonel fans

KEVIN PATTON
COLUMNIST

For Henderson County fans who are tired of traveling up and down the Pennyville/Breathitt/I-69 for the regional basketball tournaments, there's a little good news for next year. Henderson County will host the 2014 Girls Second Region Tournament and Madisonville will take its turn in the rotation in the boys tournament.

It will be the first time Henderson County has hosted the regional since 2003 when the Lady Colonels lost to Christian County in a triple overtime thriller in the semifinal round.

Former Henderson County coach Mark Starns guided his Fleming County squad to the Sweet 16 by beating two-time defending champion Rowan County for the fifth time this season 60-45 in the 16th Region championship Friday at Morehead State.

Fleming County will take a 28-6 record into its first-round game against either John Hardin or North Hardin Thursday at 12:30 p.m.

It will be the second trip to the state tournament as a head coach for Starns, who took Johnson Central to the 15th Region title in 2006. In five seasons at Henderson County, Starns' teams ended their seasons to the eventual Second Region champion every year including twice in the regional finals.

The deadline for applications for Henderson County's football coach has passed, but whoever is hired to succeed Clay Clevenger will face a challenging schedule.

In addition to district newcomer McCracken County, the Colonels have added games with Northern Kentucky power Covington Catholic, longtime rival Madisonville and perennial 3-A contender Paducah Tilghman. That trio of opponents will replace Bowling Green, Meade County and Apollo from the 2012 schedule. McCracken County, which will be the result of the consolidation of Heath, Lone Oak and Reidland, replaces Muhlenberg County in the Class 6-A First District.

Despite losing two-time defending 5-A state champion Bowling Green, there's no question next season's schedule is tougher than the preceding one.

Here's a look at the full schedule: Aug. 23, at Evansville Reitz; Aug. 30, Evansville North; Sept. 6, Christian Co.; Sept. 13, Covington Catholic; Sept. 20, at Madisonville; Sept. 27, at Paducah Tilghman; Oct. 11, Daviess Co.; Oct. 18, Marshall Co.; Oct. 25, at McCracken Co.; Nov. 1, at Owensboro.

Former Henderson County two-sport athlete Jason Haner was inducted into the Kaskaskia College Athletics Hall of Fame as part of the school's 1988-89 baseball team.

Kaskaskia finished 52-28 that season, won the conference and sectional tournament championships and finished fourth in the region.

Haner, who played baseball and soccer for Henderson County from 1984-87, went on to play baseball at Murray State after graduating from the Centralia, Ill., junior college.

A baby looks up at Guido, one of the Milwaukee Brewers' base-running sausages, during a United Way tailgate party in Racine, Wis., in 2006.

CEDARBURG, Wis. – The case of the missing sausage is closed.

The Journal Sentinel in Milwaukee is reporting the 7-foot Italian sausage costume, usually seen racing around Miller Park during Brewers games, has been found after going missing for nearly two weeks.

Guido, the sausage with the chef's hat and bow tie, was dropped off in a bar in Cedarburg Wednesday night, hours after the missing costume became national news.

Jen Mohney, a bartender at TJ Ryan's, tells the Journal Sentinel two men — one wearing a hoodie pulled over his face — lugged the costume into the bar, dropped it onto a stool and told her "You did not see anything."

She says they left quickly, and she called police.

The costume — with someone on it — was last seen bar hopping in the area Feb. 16 for a fundraiser at local bars.

Police were searching for the missing costume, question bar patrons where it was last spotted.

The costume is owned by Milwaukee-based sausage company Klement's. The Racing Sausages, including the Bratwurst, the Polish Sausage, the Hot Dog and the Chorizo, are a popular sight running bases at Brewers home games. The costumes are available for rent.

Cubs take Ozzy, Vanna out of game

CHICAGO – Maybe it was race driver Jeff Gordon's shout out to the fans at "Wrigley Stadium." Or Ozzy Osbourne, who decided the lyrics of "Take Me Out to The Ball Game" were not nearly as interesting as the mostly unintelligible words he'd picked out for himself. Or perhaps it was actress Denise Richards, who brought along a little cheat sheet in case she forgot the words.

Whatever the reason, the Chicago Cubs have decided to make the broadcast booth at Wrigley Field, and more importantly, the microphone, off limits to the likes of Vanna White, Erik Estrada and Mickey Rooney. Marion Ross will apparently be the last member of the "Happy Days" cast to sing during the seventh-inning stretch. No more Kid Rock, who, as the story goes, knew it was customary to say something at the end of the song, but went with "Let's get some lunch!" instead of the more traditional "Let's get some runs."

"I think the last couple of years we had gotten away to a couple of people who weren't tied to Chicago," said Jim Oboikowitch, the Cubs in-game programming director in what might be a bit of understatement after more than a decade of Peter Frampton, David Cassidy, Barbara Eden and Frank Sinatra (Junior) leading the Wrigley faithful in song.

Some fans are pleased.

"It was a good idea at first," Al Yellon, who runs bleedcubbieblue.com, said of the Cubs' decision to allow celebrities to take over the job the late Harry Caray handled so famously for so many years. "But it turned into a celebrity fest with D-list celebrities."

Ouch.

Female kicker set for NFL tryout

Lauren Silberman has a scant chance at making the NFL.

Silberman never kicked anything more than a soccer ball in an organized game and she just started practicing long-range field goals.

Even so, the first female kicker scheduled to try out at an NFL regional scouting combine would like to see where her new hobby will take her. In an era where Danica Patrick can contend against men in motor sports, Silberman is about to take a big kick forward for female athletes, even if the odds are clearly stacked against her.

The 28-year-old Silberman will kick Sunday at the New York Jets' training facility in Florham Park, N.J.

"I realize that I may not make an NFL team this year," Silberman told NFL.com. "But for me, I'm expecting to have fun, to meet really interesting people and hopefully perfect my technique from the other tremendous kickers that will be in attendance."

Her goal for the weekend is a true long shot — perfect 60-yard field goals.

Referees challenged to stay sharp in stressful, energy-sapping job

By Eric Olson
Associated Press

Mike Eades officiated a late-night, Big Ten showdown between Michigan and Indiana this season, and early the next afternoon was 900 miles away calling a game at Connecticut. John Gaffney? He called two Big East games 185 miles apart — on the same day. And then there is Karl Hess, who refereed games 22 of the first 23 days of the season, including 16 straight.

Fans have noticed and many are wondering whether college basketball refs are overworked, tired and prone to making bad calls or no calls at all.

Coaches and the people who make the referees' schedules don't go along with that. They insist that only a small number of officials actually keep those crazy hours and they usually are considered the best in the business.

There are about 1,000 referees registered with the NCAA officiating website who identify themselves as Division I officials. Of those, only 109 called 50 or more games over the four-plus months of the 2011-12 season, according to Statsheet.com, a website that tracks officials' workload.

"Those are the people everyone sees night after night on television because they go from the Big East, to the ACC, to the SEC, to the Big Ten," longtime Big East officiating coordinator Art Hyland said. "They tend to cause this issue that they're working too much. Now, I would say to you that there are some officials who do work too much, but it's not that many."

Active officials are reticent to speak with the media about any phase of their jobs, especially during the season. But John Higgins, who works mostly in the Big 12 and Missouri Valley Conference and is among the national leaders in games called this season, said the great majority of referees are like people with other occupations.

"If (refs) work four or five days out of seven, it's no different," he said. "The only thing is, ours is a two-hour day and everybody else's is eight."

While declining to comment further, Higgins did acknowledge travel can take a physical and mental toll.

Hess and Roger Ayers — both of whom work mostly in the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Big East — started the week as the national co-leaders in games worked this season, at 79, or an average of 5.1 a week.

Tim Higgins (no relation to John), who retired from officiating after last season following 30-plus years in the Big East, Big Ten and ACC, said the media and athletic administrators seem more concerned about fatigue than the officials themselves.

St. John's head coach Steve Lavin talks with referee Wally Rutecki in the first half of their NCAA college basketball game against Pittsburgh at Madison Square Garden in New York, Sunday.

"There is a reason the (same) guys are there every night," Tim Higgins said. "Even if a guy is tired, he probably still is better than anyone else you get. "

The best refs can overcome the energy-sapping stress caused by travel, sleeping in a different bed four or five times a week and the night-in, night-out pressure cooker that is officiating Division I games. They're able to keep up with the pace of play, get into the right position to make calls and maintain clear judgment and even temperament.

"When you get into that arena and that band is playing and the kids are screaming ... if you can't get up for two hours to get the job done, you're not going to be around long," Tim Higgins said.

NCAA coordinator of officials John Adams said the NCAA has no position on how many games a season or how many consecutive nights an official should work. Adams said an official must work at least 25 regular-season games to be eligible to be among the 100 selected for the NCAA tournament.

It's up to the conference's officiating coordinators, who handle assignments through the league tournaments, to decide how much work is too much.

Adams, Hyland and Southeastern Conference officiating coordinator Gerald Boudreaux agree that four is the optimum number of games a week for the top refs. Only 27 have averaged that many a games a week this season, according to Statsheet.com.

Adams said an official who can drive an hour from home for his games probably would have no problem working as many as 13 or 14 nights in a row. But then there are the refs who might work a game in Miami one night and in Syracuse, N.Y., the next.

College officials are independent contractors who earn about $2,500 a game in the power conferences. The pay typically covers travel and room and board. Adams said for most of the officials who call 60 or more games a year, this is their main source of income.

Like good plumbers and mechanics, the best refs are in high demand.

An official will declare his primary conference, and that conference is free to schedule him for however many games it needs him. Once his assignments are finalized, typically by mid-September, he's free to make himself available to other conferences to fill in dates.

"There is no limit to the number of conferences they can work in," Boudreaux said. "The coaches want the best guys on their games."

Eades, Gaffney and Hess are three of those sought-after refs.

Eades worked Michigan-Indiana, the No. 1-vs.-No. 3 matchup on Feb. 2 that tipped off at 9:05 p.m. EST in Bloomington, Ind. At 2 p.m. the next afternoon, Eades was in Storrs, Conn., for Connecticut-South Florida.

Gaffney called the DePaul-Marquette game on Feb. 9 that started at 1 p.m. CST in Milwaukee and made it to South Bend, Ind., with 90 minutes to spare for the 9 p.m. EST game between Louisville and Notre Dame that went to five overtimes.

Another ref had been scheduled to work the game in South Bend, but he couldn't get there because of a winter storm. Hyland had notified Gaffney at 8 a.m. that he would have to pull double duty.

While working 22 of 23 days early in the season, Hess reffed in 12 Eastern states and the District of Columbia. The past couple months he's worked mostly three or four days in a row.

Ayers' longest stretch of consecutive days worked is 10, in six states and D.C. Otherwise, he hasn't officiated more than six straight days.

Tim Higgins, the retired ref, described an official's routine this way: Arrive in the city of the game he'll work by midmorning, do a workout at the hotel gym, take a nap, call the game, get up the next morning and repeat.

"It's the travel that's tough," he said.

Briefs

Wainwright, Cards fall to Nationals 6-2

JUPITER, Fla. – Adam Wainwright struggled with location in his second spring-training start, giving up five runs and eight hits over three innings Saturday in the St. Louis Cardinals' 6-2 loss to the Washington Nationals.

Gio Gonzalez won his second exhibition start for the Nationals, allowing two runs and five hits in three innings.

Kurt Suzuki doubled off the Cardinals' ace leading off the second and scored on Chris Marrero's single. One out later. Anthony Rendon homered on a drive more than halfway up the batter's eye beyond the center-field wall.

Next U.S. gymnasts tumble onto scene

WORCESTER, Mass. – Fifteen-year-old Katelyn Ohashi won her first senior gymnastics competition, and Olympian Jake Dalton took the men's title on Saturday at the American Cup.

The event is the first of the World Cup season and the most prestigious international gymnastics competition on U.S. soil.

But it was also the coming out party for the American women, Ohashi and runner-up Simone Biles, who will try to follow up the Fierce Five's London gold with a repeat in Rio de Janeiro in 2016.

White defends halfpipe title

VAIL, Colo. – Shaun White defended his title at the U.S. Open snowboarding championships, easily winning the event Saturday with a flawless performance through a sun-splashed halfpipe.

White went big in his opening run, holding little back, and only got better on his second pass when he turned in the high score of 95.58 points.

Japanese teenager Ayumu Hirano finished second and Louie Vito of Sandy, Utah, took third.

Djokovic takes title at Dubai

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates – Novak Djokovic won his fourth Dubai Championships title on Saturday by beating third-seeded Tomas Berdych 7-5, 6-3.

The top-ranked Djokovic extended his unbeaten streak this year to 13 matches and has beaten Berdych in 13 of their last 14 meetings.

Djokovic broke to go up 5-3 in the second set, and saved a break point in the next game before clinching the victory with a forehand winner.

Spurs' Parker out about a month

SAN ANTONIO – San Antonio Spurs guard Tony Parker will be out for about a month with a left ankle sprain.

Parker, the team's leading assist man, injured the ankle in the third period of Friday night's win over the Sacramento Kings.

The team announced Saturday afternoon that an MRI showed Parker had a Grade 2 left ankle sprain, and will be out for "approximately four weeks."

The 30-year-old Parker closed out February averaging 26.1 points and 8.3 assists and had shot 54 percent from the field.

Juwan Howard, 40, will return to Heat

Juwan Howard has signed a 10-day contract to return to the Miami Heat.

The 40-year-old Howard will be entering his 19th NBA season. The past two were spent with Miami.

The Heat elected not to sign Howard before this season's training camp, though as far back as September, Miami coach Erik Spoelstra said the reigning NBA champions would consider bringing the veteran forward back at some point.

Vyjack captures Gotham Stakes

■ He remains unbeaten on Kentucky Derby trail by rallying for victory at Big A

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – Vyjack remained unbeaten on his way to the Kentucky Derby, rallying for a 2¼ length victory in the $400,000 Gotham Stakes for 3-year-olds on Saturday at Aqueduct.

The gelding trained by Rudy Rodriguez is now 4 for 4, all at Aqueduct. The Gotham victory was worth 50 qualifying points for the Derby.

"We thought maybe this horse could take us there," Rodriguez said. "So far, he's proven he belongs with this kind. Hopefully, he can keep going."

Joel Rosario was aboard as the 2-1 second choice ran the 1 1-16 miles in 1:44.09, paying $6.70, $4.20 and $3.20.

West Hills Giant set the pace at 33-1 and held on for second with Elnaawi third.

It appeared West Hills Giant would pull off a stunner at the top of the lane until Vyjack, far back most of the race, looped the field and stormed down the center of the track.

The tactics were surprising in that Vyjack raced close to the leaders in his three prior victories.

"I just let him do whatever he wanted to do," said Rosario, who was aboard for the first time. "Turning for home I was pretty far behind, but that's where he wanted to be. He passed West Hills Giant and then he just kept on going."

Owner David Wilkenfeld said Vyjack will make one more start before the Derby, Aqueduct's Wood Memorial on April 6.

West Hills Giant paid $21.20 and $12.20, surviving a claim of foul by Channing Hill, the rider on third-place finisher Elnaawi, who returned $6.40 to show.

The biggest disappointment was the fifth-place finish by Overanalyze, the 8-5 favorite. Making his first start since winning the Remsen Stakes at Aqueduct in November, Overanalyze raced close to the pace but lacked a finishing punch in the stretch.

"I was where I wanted to be, perfect position, nice pace," jockey John Velazquez said. "He didn't come up with any run at all."

In the earlier stakes, Comma to the Top edged Saturday's Charm by a nose in the $200,000 Tom Fool Handicap. Rosario was also aboard as he won two stakes on the day. Peter Miller trained the 5-year-old gelding who won for the 12th time in 28 races. The 2-1 favorite paid $6.30 to win. The time was 1:10.26 for the six furlongs.

Summer Applause, the 6-5 favorite, beat Twice The Lady by 2¾ lengths in the Top Flight Handicap for fillies and mares. Velazquez rode for trainer Chad Brown as the 4-year-old improved to 4 for 9, paying $4.60 to win.

■ Swale Stakes: Clearly Now rallied at the top of the stretch for a 1¾-length victory over long shot Singanothersong to win the $150,000 Swale Stakes at Gulstream Park on Saturday.

Clearly Now was making his first start since finishing third in the $400,000 Holy Bull Stakes. The Kentucky-bred horse won his first two starts at Woodbine in Canada last year for trainer Brian Lynch.

Singanothersong raced for the lead from the start in the Swale with another long shot, Tulira Castle, until Clearly Now caught them nearing the eighth pole.

Wes Welker's Undrafted finished third. Even-money favorite Forty Tales checked in fifth.

Clearly Now paid $16, $8.20 and $5.20 for win and was timed the seven furlongs in 1:23:19 over the fast track. Singanothersong paid $36.40 and $18.00, and Undrafted paid $4.00.

Kyle Busch leads 142 laps for Phoenix win

By John Marshall
Associated Press

AVONDALE, Ariz. – Kyle Busch overcame a mid-race gaffe on pit road with a dominating performance, leading 142 laps to win his fifth Nationwide Series race at Phoenix International Raceway on Saturday.

Busch started from the pole and shook off a speeding penalty to pit road with what was easily the fastest car during the 200-lap race around PIR's mile oval.

He eclipsed 11,000 career laps during the race and picked up his 52nd Nationwide victory, extending his own record. Busch has won seven times at Phoenix, including once in Sprint Cup and twice in the trucks series.

Brad Keselowski finished second and Justin Allgaier was third. Trevor Bayne finished fourth, followed by Elliott Sadler.

The Nationwide Series got off to an awful start at Daytona last week, when Tony Stewart's season-opening win was marred by a 12-car crash on the final lap that left at least two dozen fans injured.

The wreck happened as the cars came around for the checkered flag and leader Regan Smith tried to block Keselowski. That triggered a chain reaction that piled up cars and sent rookie Kyle Larson's car airborne into the fence, shearing it into pieces that flew into the grandstand.

Two injured fans remain in the hospital.

The Phoenix race had a crash involving six cars on the fourth lap and 38 laps were under caution during the race, but no one was injured.

Busch led the first 40 laps, but was sent to the back of the pack — to 23rd — for entering pit road too fast during a caution. He also overshot his pit stall, thinking it was the last one instead of the one before, but didn't seem bothered once he got back on the track.

"Oh, well, let's make a race of it," he said through the radio. "Let's go get it."

He did, ripping through the field, up to fifth within a few of laps off the restart, past Matt Kenseth for the lead not long after that.

Busch finished 32nd in Daytona due to engine trouble after leading 22 laps, but had no problems down the stretch in the desert.

He dropped to fifth with about 50 laps left when he went into the pits, but was quickly back out front. He wasn't challenged again, finishing nearly 2 seconds ahead of Keselowski at the checkered flag before filling the grandstands with white smoke as he spun doughnuts around the start/finish line.

Five-time Sprint Cup champion Jimmie Johnson, who won his second Daytona 500 last week, finished 12th in his first Nationwide race since 2011.

■ NASCAR is sending suspended driver Jeremy Clements to a sports psychologist in hopes of getting him back on the track soon.

Steve O'Donnell, NASCAR's Senior Vice President of Racing Operations, said Saturday that Clements will work with Dr. Richard Lapchick to get him back in his car as quickly as possible and as the organization deems fit.

Clements was suspended indefinitely on Wednesday for violating the sanctioning body's code of conduct for making what O'Donnell said was an "intolerable and insensitive remark" during the course of an interview.

Guthrie and Thompson tied for the lead in Honda Classic

Wire reports

PGA Tour rookie Luke Guthrie and Michael Thompson survived the chilly, blustery conditions and shared the lead Saturday in the Honda Classic.

With wind making the course play longer and the water look even more daunting, Guthrie held on for a 1-over 71 in his first time playing in the last group on tour. The 22-year-old from Illinois closed with eight good pars. Thompson narrowly missed a 20-foot eagle putt on the par-5 18th hole for a 70.

They were at 8-under 202, and had to buckle down for what figures to be a wide open final round.

Lee Westwood chipped for an unlikely birdie on the 14th hole, made a 20-foot birdie on the 17th and salvaged a par despite hitting 3-wood into the water on the final hole for a 70 that left him only two shots behind. Geoff Ogilvy also had to work hard for a 70, starting with three bogeys on the opening four holes. Ogilvy made a 7-foot birdie putt on the 18th to join Westwood at 202 and give him a great chance to erase a miserable West Coast Swing.

Ogilvy, who failed to finish in the top 50 and qualify for the Masters at the end of last year by one shot, missed his last four cuts and didn't qualify for the Match Play Championship last week. He has until the end of the month to go from No. 79 into the top 50, making Sunday an important day.

Eleven players were separated by four shots going into the final round, a group that included Rickie Fowler, Charles Howell III, Keegan Bradley and Justin Rose.

Missing from the mix was Tiger Woods.

Woods had hoped to post a low score to at least get into contention and was headed that way with a 32 on the front nine. But he didn't make another birdie the rest of the way, and took a double bogey on the par-3 17th when his shot plugged into the bank short of the green and he never found the ball. He wound up with a 70, not a bad score under the conditions, but not good enough to achieve what he wanted. He was eight shots behind.

Woods was nine shots out of the lead a year ago after 54 holes, closed with a 62 and was runner-up by two shots to Rory McIlroy.

Instead of the No. 1 player at the top of the leaderboard, there is a pair of players who have never won on the PGA Tour, two players who realized that a victory Sunday would get them into the Masters. Thompson hasn't been to Augusta National since 2008 as a U.S. Amateur finalist.

■ LPGA Tour: Stacy Lewis shared the lead with Na Yeon Choi at the HSBC Women's Champions after the South Korean birdied the 18th hole in a rain-delayed third round on Saturday.

Choi shot a 5-under 67 to tie the 28-year-old American at 14-under 202. Lewis, the overnight leader and reigning LPGA Player of the Year, had a 69.

■ European Tour: Darren Fichardt stormed into a four-way share of the lead with an 8-under-par 64 in the third round of the European Tour's rain-delayed Tshwane Open on Saturday.

Do you suffer from Asthma?

Asthma is a chronic disease that causes swelling and inflammation in the airways that lead to your lungs. When asthma flares up, the airways tighten and become narrower which keeps the air from passing through easily and makes it hard to breathe. The swelling and inflammation in the airways can lead to permanent changes in the airways and harm the lungs. Symptoms of asthma may include, wheezing, coughing and chest tightness.

If you or someone you know suffers from asthma, you may qualify to participate in a national clinical research study conducted by the allergy department at Deaconess Clinic. Participation includes all study-related exams and study medication at no cost, as well as compensation for time and travel. You must be age18 to 65 to qualify.

Ryan's 31 points lift Aces to win over ISU

Wire reports

Colt Ryan scored 31 points on Saturday, helping Evansville record an 84-68 victory over Indiana State.

The Aces (18-13, 10-8 Missouri Valley) also got 12 points from Ryan Sawvell to gain a split in their two-game season series in their final home game of the regular season.

Ryan hit 11 of 19 shots from the floor, including 3 of 4 from 3-point range.

Indiana State (17-13, 9-9) got 20 points from Jake Odum, 16 points from R.J. Mahurin and 13 points from Dawon Cummings.

Evansville scored 38 points off the bench and forced 14 turnovers.

Indiana State, which led briefly early in the second half, scored 21 points off the bench and forced 13 turnovers.

Evansville helped maintain its advantage by connecting on seven of its final 10 shots.

■ Middle Tennessee 70, Western Ky. 62: JT Sulton scored 17 points and Middle Tennessee completed a record-setting Sun Belt Conference season by defeating Western Kentucky 70-62 Saturday night.

The Blue Raiders (27-4, 19-1) broke the record for Sun Belt wins in a season, which they shared with New Orleans (1992-93). They matched the school's record for wins in a season and extended their winning streak to 16 games, now the nation's second longest.

Led by George Fant's 18 points, the Hilltoppers (16-15, 10-10) stayed close throughout and took a 52-48 lead with 8:26 remaining. After Middle Tennessee regained the lead, Western Kentucky tied it at 62 on Brandon Harris' 3-pointer with 1:54 left.

Shawn Jones' tip-in gave the lead back to the Blue Raiders, and Neiko Hunter's layup made it 66-62 with 38 seconds left.

Western Kentucky will play in the first round of the Sun Belt tournament Friday. Middle Tennessee has a bye until Saturday.

■ Southeast Missouri 84, Murray St. 68: A.J. Jones had 20 points and six rebounds as Southeast Missouri State topped Ohio Valley Conference rival Murray State 84-68 Saturday.

Corey Wilford added 16 in each team's regular-season finale.

Southeast Missouri State (16-15, 8-8) jumped to a 22-11 lead, led 47-39 at halftime and never surrendered the advantage.

The Redhawks shot 50 perfect (26 of 52) from the field and 63 percent (12 of 19) from the perimeter while holding Murray State to 36 percent (23 of 64) from the paint and 42 percent (10 of 24) from 3-point range.

Isaiah Canaan had 22 points for Murray State (20-9, 10-6), leaving him with 1,999 points in his career.

In Canaan's last home game, he let teammate and fellow senior Jordan Burge take his spot in the starting lineup.

Young answered with a lay-up on the other end for the Razorbacks, starting a 7-0 run which put them up 52-40 and effectively put the game out of reach for the Wildcats — which committed 19 turnovers that led to 30 points for Arkansas.

The Razorbacks, next to last in the SEC in rebounding margin, also outrebounded Kentucky 44-37 — including 20 offensive rebounds.

"We weren't as tough as them, and we didn't play as hard as them," Kentucky coach John Calipari said. "They wanted the game more than us, and that team usually wins.

"And they did."

Clarke, in just his 10th start of his first season for the Razorbacks as a junior-college transfer, had the final six points of the run. His put-back of a Young miss and following free throw to complete the three-point play put Arkansas up 50-40, and he followed that moments later by grabbing his eighth rebound — leading to a foul by Kentucky and two more free throws.

Arkansas led 32-29 at halftime despite shooting only 30.8 percent (12 of 39) in the half. The Razorbacks did so behind seven points from Powell in 11 minutes, and they scored 13 points off 11 Kentucky turnovers.

The Wildcats went up 12-6 early after a free throw by Goodwin, who led Little Rock's Sylvan Hills High School to an Arkansas state championship a year ago, but the turnovers began to take its toll after that.

Young followed Goodwin's free throw with a lay-up on the other end, beginning a 12-2 run that gave the Razorbacks the lead for the first time and ended with them ahead 18-14 following a free throw by Young. The sophomore entered the game 2 of 19 from the field over his previous two games, but he finished 5 of 13 from the field on Saturday.

Goodwin was harassed throughout by the Arkansas crowd during his return to his home state, greeted with boos during pre-game warm-ups and throughout. He finished 5 of 8 from the field, 4 of 9 from the free throw line.

"It doesn't make me feel bad at all because I'm not from Fayetteville," Goodwin said. "I'm from Little Rock.

"Everybody in Little Rock loves me. That's all that matters to me."

Jarrod Polson put Kentucky back ahead 26-25 with a pair of free throws, the last lead the Wildcats had in losing for the first time since an 88-58 setback to Tennessee. That was their first game without the nation's leading shot blocker, Nerlens Noel, following a season-ending knee injury.

Kentucky had won three straight since then, including an 85-55 thrashing of Mississippi State earlier in the week, but they had no answer for Arkansas' home magic on Saturday.

"I'm real surprised," Stein-Cauley said. "To me, it felt like we had turned the corner from this right here, what we just went through. It seemed like we were past that."

Duke holds off Miami

■ Kelly scores 36 as Blue Devils avenge blowout with 79-76 victory

Wire reports

Ryan Kelly scored a career-high 36 points in his return from a foot injury that had sidelined him since January, helping third-ranked Duke beat fifth-ranked Miami 79-76 on Saturday night.

Kelly knocked down 10 of 14 shots — including 7 of 9 3-pointers— for the Blue Devils (25-4, 12-4 Atlantic Coast Conference), who avenged a blowout road loss in January by grinding out a tough win in Cameron Indoor Stadium. Quinn Cook added 15 points as Duke built a 10-point lead with about 2 minutes left then held off a frantic rally by Miami.

Shane Larkin scored 25 points to lead the Hurricanes (23-5, 14-2), who missed two 3s in the final seconds to tie it. Larkin came up short on the first over Kelly. Durand Scott ran down the rebound and fired a pass to the left corner to Rion Brown, whose final 3 clanged off the rim as the horn sounded.

Duke's Ryan Kelly (34) shoots as Miami's Julian Gamble (45) defends during the first half of their game in Durham, N.C., on Saturday. Kelly returned from a foot injury to score a career-high 36 points as the third-ranked Blue Devils defeated the fifth-ranked Hurricanes 79-76.

■ Indiana 73, Iowa 60: Cody Zeller overcame a sluggish start to score 22 points and Kevin "Yogi" Ferrell added a career-high 19 as No. 1 Indiana got past Iowa 73-60 on Saturday night.

The Hoosiers (25-4, 13-3 Big Ten) rebounded from this week's loss to Minnesota. But it was no typical night for Indiana's shooters, who were 38.9 percent from the field and didn't hit a 3-pointer until the final minute.

But Indiana played defense and took care of the ball.

Iowa (18-11, 7-9) committed 14 of its 19 turnovers in the first half and shot just 38.2 percent from the field. Roy Devyn Marble scored 18 of his 20 points in the second half to lead Iowa, while Aaron White had 14.

■ Gonzaga 81, Portland 52: Elias Harris had 20 points and nine rebounds as No. 2 Gonzaga beat Portland 81-52 on Saturday to stake a claim to its first-ever No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press' Top 25.

Kelly Olynyk added 15 points and 11 rebounds for Gonzaga (29-2, 16-0 West Coast), which had already clinched the West Coast Conference regular season title and the top seed in next weekend's tournament. Gary Bell Jr. added 14 points.

Gonzaga, winner of 12 consecutive games since a last-second loss at Butler, has escaped the losses that have afflicted other teams at or near the top of the poll in recent weeks.

■ Kansas 91, West Virginia 65: Ben McLemore scored a Kansas freshman-record 36 points, and Jeff Withey came within one block of a triple-double.

McLemore, a 6-foot-5 redshirt freshman, went to the bench with a little more than 5 minutes left after hitting 12 of 15 shots from the field, including 5 of 6 from beyond the 3-point arc. He had seven rebounds and four assists.

Withey's nine blocks ran his Big 12-and Kansas-career record to 281. He had 14 points and 10 rebounds as the Jayhawks (25-4, 13-3 Big 12).

Terry Henderson had 20 points for the Mountaineers (13-16, 6-10).

■ Florida 64, Alabama 52: Casey Prather had 10 points and nine rebounds, most of them in the second half, and Florida rallied from an eight-point deficit.

The Gators used a 15-0 run late in the second half — fueled by Prather — to pull away from the Crimson Tide and remain unbeaten at home.

Erik Murphy led Florida (23-5, 13-3 Southeastern Conference) with 15 points. Kenny Boynton added 13, and Scottie Wilbekin chipped in 11.

■ Kansas St. 64, Baylor 61: Rodney McGruder hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer and 13th-ranked Kansas State pulled out a 64-61 victory Saturday night after a failed desperation inbound pass gave the Wildcats one more chance.

Instead of settling for overtime after K-State's Shane Southwell missed badly with 1 second left, the Bears (17-12, 8-8 Big 12) brought seldom-used Jacob Neubert off the bench to try a length-of-the-court inbound pass.

■ New Mexico 53, Wyoming 42: Alex Kirk had 15 points and nine rebounds and New Mexico clinched the Mountain West Conference regular season title.

The Lobos (25-4, 12-2 MWC) went 21 for 27 from the free throw line in winning or sharing the title for fifth time in the last six seasons.

■ Oklahoma St. 78, Texas 65: Markel Brown scored 18 points, Le'Bryan Nash added 16 and Oklahoma State corralled Texas star Myck Kabongo.

A showcase of two of the Big 12's marquee point guards ended up being a sloppy one, with Kabongo committing a career-high seven turnovers while the Cowboys' Marcus Smart had five.

■ Memphis 76, Central Florida 67: Joe Jackson and Chris Crawford both scored 19 points and Memphis claimed its eighth Conference USA championship.

Adonis Thomas added 12 points for the Tigers (25-4, 14-0 CUSA), who gave coach Josh Pastner his 100th career win, all at Memphis.

■ VCU 84, Butler 52: Troy Daniels scored 14 of his 20 points in the first half and VCU's full-court pressure overwhelmed Butler from the outset.

In a much anticipated rematch of their unlikely meeting in the national semifinals in Houston in 2011, the Rams (23-6, 11-3 Atlantic 10) dominated.

■ Marquette 72, Notre Dame 64: Jamil Wilson tied his career-high with 19 points and Chris Otule added a season-high 16 on 8-of-8 shooting as Marquette won its 25th consecutive home game.

Wilson scored 17 points in the second half, including seven down the stretch, for the Golden Eagles (21-7, 12-4 Big East). His two free throws were the final points in the game.

■ St. Louis 66, George Washington 58: Dwayne Evans scored 22 points and Kwamain Mitchell added 18 and No. 18 Saint Louis won its 11th straight game, holding off George Washington 66-58 on Saturday.

With two games remaining in the regular season, Saint Louis (23-5, 12-2 Atlantic 10) holds a one-game lead over Virginia Commonwealth (23-6, 11-3), which routed No. 20 Butler 84-52 on Saturday.

■ Creighton 91, Wichita State 80: Doug McDermott scored 41 points in what might have been his last home game for Creighton, and the Bluejays shot 70 percent while winning the Missouri Valley Conference regular-season championship with a 91-80 victory over Wichita State on Saturday.

■ Cincinnati 61, Connecticut 56: Sean Kilpatrick scored 20 points and made a pair of late free throws Saturday, and Cincinnati ended a three-game losing streak with a 61-56 victory over Connecticut, which was missing its top scorer.

■ Missouri 87, LSU 76: Laurence Bowers had 23 points and 10 rebounds and Alex Oriakhi had 18 points, 10 boards and four blocks, helping Missouri bounce back from an awful start and stay perfect at home with an 87-76 victory over LSU on Saturday.

■ Georgia 78, Tennessee 68: Kentavious Caldwell-Pope scored 25 points and Georgia recovered after losing an 11-point lead to beat Tennessee 78-68 on Saturday, ending the Vols' six-game winning streak.

■ Mississippi State 73, Mississippi 67: Colin Borchert scored a career-high 21 points, Gavin Ware added 12 and Mississippi State beat Mississippi 73-67 on Saturday to break a 13-game losing streak.

■ Texas A&M 74, South Carolina 56: Elston Turner scored 28 points and Ray Turner 16 to help Texas A&M to a 74-56 win over South Carolina on Saturday night in the first-ever meeting between the new Southeastern Conference foes.

■ Minnesota 73, Penn State 44: Trevor Mbakwe had 13 points and 13 rebounds and Minnesota held Penn State scoreless for the first 11 minutes of the game to cruise to a 73-44 victory on Saturday.

■ Illinois 72, Nebraska 65: Illinois used double-figure scoring from five players to hold off stubborn Nebraska Saturday, 72-65.

Lady Wildcats ready for Senior Day

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LEXINGTON — A'dia Mathies and Brittany Henderson arrived at Kentucky four years ago hoping to lift the program from mediocrity into Southeastern Conference contention.

The Wildcats' duo enters Sunday's Senior Day with an upgraded plan — reaching the Final Four.

The next step toward that goal is beating No. 8 Tennessee (23-5, 14-1), which clinched the SEC regular season title and ended Kentucky's one-year championship reign. The No. 10 Wildcats (24-4, 12-3) have clinched a first-round bye for next week's conference tournament and want to secure the No. 2 seed.

Kentucky's duo will have a hand in that quest, just as they've done in building a 105-28 record with two Elite Eight appearances. As the Wildcats' winningest class, they've also put Matthew Mitchell on the brink of becoming Kentucky's most successful coach.

Those achievements please the soft-spoken Mathies more than her progress toward becoming one of Kentucky's all-time greats.

"I had no clue how it was going to turn out," said the 5-foot-9 guard, the school's No. 2 scorer with 1,883 points. "When we were being recruited, UK was a .500-level team. To come in here and automatically change it around the first year, we had no expectations. It just changed the whole culture and nature for UK.

"I just went out there head-first, it came out good and I'm glad it did."

If Mathies' friends and family had their way, the Louisville native would have been excelling with the hometown Cardinals. While they pushed hard for her to stay home and follow the footsteps of former All-American Angel McCoughtry — a 2012 Olympic gold medalist with Team USA and WNBA Atlanta Dream forward — Mathies was firmly committed to reversing Kentucky's fortunes.

Her record has proved she made the right decision.

"Angel McCoughtry would not have been there if I went to Louisville, so I never understood that," said Mathies, averaging 16.0 points, 4.5 rebounds, 2.3 assists and 1.7 steals per game. "I kind of wanted to be that person for this side, that person to change the program and make it an elite program. Even though I had no expectations, we ended up doing it and I am just glad I made that decision."

Henderson has been a reserve this season after starting 37 of 67 games the previous two years, but the 6-2 forward started Thursday night at Mississippi with DeNesha Stallworth suffering flu-like symptoms. She played 13 minutes and grabbed two rebounds during Kentucky's 90-65 victory, her latest contribution in a career of doing whatever the Wildcats need.

Like Mathies, the bottom line was about results more than personal achievements. And being part of a team considered a national championship contender has been more fulfilling than her 3.0 points-per-game scoring average.

Big leaguers adapting to very long spring training

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

PAUL SANCYA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cincinnati Reds outfielder Shin-Soo Choo, of South Korea, bunts during spring training baseball in Goodyear, Ariz., on Monday, Feb. 18. Spring training is extra long for major leaguers this season because of the World Baseball Classic.

PHOENIX – Snow fell on the Valley of the Sun shortly after the major leaguers arrived in February, covering the cacti and turning the Diamondbacks' diamond white. Hefty hailstones pelted the Giants' cars in Scottsdale, and freezing winds howled outside the Dodgers' clubhouse in Glendale.

Crazy things can happen when spring training starts before spring.

With the latest World Baseball Classic taking dozens of players away from their teams in March, the majors again supersized their annual rite of renewal, adding a seventh week to spring training. Teams reported several days earlier than usual, and they began exhibition play well before the February calendar flipped to March.

All of this extra time in camp is a blessing to some, a monotonous annoyance to others — and there's still a month to go.

"I can't believe we're already playing games," new Dodgers right-hander Zack Greinke said last week. "I feel like we just got to spring training. If we just pace ourselves out, it'll be fine. But it's definitely different. I don't know what I think about it yet."

This early start has led to unusual occurrences, whether it's that freak Cactus League snowstorm or Grapefruit League lineups loaded with minor leaguers and fringe prospects for much of February. Since many stars sitting out the WBC don't want to peak too soon in their preseason preparation, they've got extra time to spend working on their golf swings, playing clubhouse pingpong or idly counting the days until March 31, when the Rangers and Astros open the regular season.

"Everyone knows that spring training is at least a week too long, and probably two weeks too long just on a regular basis," said Texas slugger Lance Berkman, who skipped the first week of games to avoid starting too soon on his injured calf. "And this year it's even longer than that."

Indeed, the Dodgers will play a head-scratching 40 exhibition games this spring. The San Diego Padres are setting a franchise record with 38 games, and several other teams are clocking in with similar numbers. Managers have worked out detailed plans to pace their teams for the long haul to opening day. Many players are voluntarily holding back on their normal spring routines, particularly when they're coming back from injuries or offseason surgery.

"Basically it's a week longer," Milwaukee manager Ron Roenicke said. "So those guys, it's usually the last week or two of spring where we're having the boredom, and those regulars want to start the season ... and now you've got to add another week onto that."

But that's leaving fans holding tickets to spring games featuring watered-down lineups with almost no recognizable names. For instance, the Angels' split-squad roster for its spring opener against the Giants had maybe one player with a chance to make the major league team — and certainly not Albert Pujols, who won't play until mid-March to give extra rest to his surgically repaired right knee.

While the Dodgers put Clayton Kershaw and Greinke into their first two exhibition games, the Angels, White Sox, Royals, Orioles and several other teams held back their starting pitchers for the first week or more, trying to keep their rotations on their typical ramp-up to opening day.

"If you think about it, it's basically a quarter of a full season in training camp," said Angels manager Mike Scioscia, who kept Jered Weaver, C.J. Wilson and his other three starters on the shelf. "I think it's counterproductive. It's kind of a softer spring in how you're going to step up. We've got more time, and we're going to take advantage of that. If we got to them earlier, it might ruin their edge for opening day."

Yankees left-hander Andy Pettitte acknowledges the long spring schedule changed his approach.

"It's slowed me down in a big way," the 40-year-old said. "It's a long spring training, so they give a few days off in between my bullpens, stuff like that. You've got so much time down here, it's like, 'Why rush?' We work backwards. You work from the opening day of the season and figure out what you need. It's definitely impacted me."

Others are grateful for every extra week. Players returning from injury or surgery — everybody from Pujols and Detroit's Max Scherzer to the Yankees' Mariano Rivera and C.C. Sabathia — have all the time they need to get closer to full strength.

"We don't want them to start too many games down here, because then you're using innings that you would use during the season," said Yankees manager Joe Girardi, who's limiting Sabathia in his return from elbow surgery. "You can control their pitch count easy. The key is to get them built up and just ready for the season."

And the teams that played deep into October last fall welcomed the extra time in spring. With a shorter offseason after sweeping the Tigers in the World Series last fall, many San Francisco Giants didn't get as much work done during the winter, instead giving their bodies a needed break.

"I'm glad that spring training (started) earlier so we can make sure these guys are ready," San Francisco manager Bruce Bochy said.

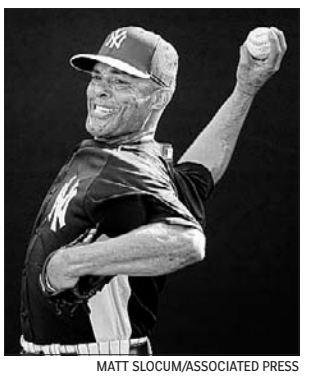

After the Tigers' second straight trip to the postseason, manager Jim Leyland is balancing his concerns about Detroit's long seasons against the demands of a seven-week spring.

"We're not going to baby them, but we're not going to kill them, either," Leyland said.

Bochy thinks players who took part in winter ball had a head start going into spring training, particularly with a shorter gap between the dates when pitchers and catchers report and when position players arrive. Many pitchers had fewer bullpen sessions than normal before facing live hitting this spring.

Aging Yanks will be putting on old-timer's day all season long

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

MATT SLOCUM/ASSOCIATED PRESS

New York Yankees veteran reliever Mariano Rivera, 43, pitches during a workout at spring training on Saturday, Feb. 16, in Tampa, Fla.

KISSIMMEE, Fla. – It's hard to bet against the New York Yankees.

All the legends. All the history. All the championships.

But it's time to declare their time has passed, at least for this season.

All of a sudden, the Yankees have grown old. Real old. So old they should try to work out some sort of sponsorship deal with AARP. Heck, it's going to seem like old-timer's day all summer at Yankee Stadium. The only way you'll be able to tell any difference is when Yogi Berra rides out in a car, which means it actually is old-timer's day. (Then again, he's only 87; the Yanks might have plans to put him behind the plate.)

Sorry, there's just no way to see this group of banged-up geezers getting back to the playoffs, unless everyone else in the AL East falls apart.

"If we win, then we're experienced," shortstop Derek Jeter said the other day, still in the midst of his comeback from a broken ankle. "If we lose, we're old."

We're betting on the latter. You can't ignore those numbers on the birth certificates.

Closer Mariano Rivera is 43 and coming off major knee surgery. Starting pitcher Andy Pettitte is closing in on his 41st birthday. Outfielder Ichiro Suzuki is 39. Jeter, the Yankees' shortstop and captain, will turn 39 before the All-Star break.

"It makes me feel kind of young," quipped outfielder Matt Diaz, who'll turn 35 on Sunday.

If there were a true mix of old and young, that would be one thing. Experience has its place, a very valuable place. But the Yankees, with their never-ending quest to win yesterday, have found themselves saddled with a long-in-the-tooth roster that is highly unlikely to hold up over the grind of a 162-game schedule. It's struggling just to answer the bell for spring training — the Yanks lost their seventh straight exhibition game on Friday.

The opening-day lineup is expected to include only two players in their 20s — outfielder Brett Gardner (who will turn 30 before the season ends) and catcher Francisco Cervelli. The average age of the regulars will be nearly 33, and that doesn't include Alex Rodriguez, who's 37 but played like he was 137 last October.

A-Rod is still recovering from hip surgery and not expected back until around midseason, though that's probably a Bronx Blessing (other than having to pay him all that money). Rodriguez has grown old faster than anyone on a team filled with aging stars, perhaps because of all that junk he was putting in his body years ago.

The pitching staff is much the same story.

Ace CC Sabathia is a relative youngster at 32, but he's still recovering from offseason surgery to remove bone spurs from his left elbow. Next up are 38-year-old Hiroki Kuroda and Pettitte, who's already retired once and come back. There's some kids at the end of the rotation, but Phil Hughes is sidelined with a bulging disc, Ivan Nova pitched poorly down the stretch last season, and David Phelps is unproven.

After Rafael Soriano declined an option to return, the Yankees had little choice but to count on Rivera handling the closer role for another season, even though he tore up a knee shagging flies in batting practice less than a year ago.

Rivera, like many of his teammates, has yet to take part in an actual spring training game.

A word of warning to Yankees fans: If you're coming to Florida anytime soon, count on paying full price to watch a bunch of guys who likely will be in Triple-A this season. I caught the Bombers a couple of times in the past week and barely even recognized 'em. Most of the important work is going on in Tampa, where simulated games and extended batting practices are the order of the day.

Yet, despite all evidence to the contrary, Yankees owner Hal Steinbrenner insisted he's excited about his team.

Maybe he's just in a state of denial.

"I think we've got a good mix of young players and veterans," he said. "There's been a lot of talk about our age, but I like having those veterans. I like the age. I like the experience, and I think it's great for the young players to have that around."

Big-budget Jack is lively, detailed 'Giant Slayer'

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

Review

A big-budget, effects-laden, 3-D retelling of the Jack and the Beanstalk legend may seem like the unlikeliest pairing yet of director Bryan Singer and writer Christopher McQuarrie, but "Jack the Giant Slayer" ends up being smart, thrilling and a whole lot of fun.

Singer and McQuarrie's collaborations include, most famously, the twisty crime mystery "The Usual Suspects" (which earned McQuarrie an original-screenplay Oscar) and the Hitler assassination drama "Valkyrie," featuring an eye patch-wearing Tom Cruise. They've sort of been all over the place together over the past couple decades — why not reinterpret a classic fairy tale? This time, the screenwriter is aided by Darren Lemke and Dan Studney; nevertheless there remains a sense of both briskness and substance.

"Jack the Giant Slayer" is cheeky without being too obnoxiously cutesy. While the look of it is medieval, the vibe seems more current, but it's not so anachronistic as to be self-referential and subversive along the lines of a "Shrek," for example. In that regard, it actually ends up being pleasingly old-fashioned.

Shot in 3-D — rather than one of those muddled 2-D redos — the film looks crisp and clean, much more so than the trailers and ads might suggest. The action sequences are cut in an unobtrusive way as to allow the intricacy of what's happening on screen to shine through. And once it bursts forth from the ground, the beanstalk itself is magnificent; enormous and richly detailed, it feels like a living, breathing and formidable thing.

Tasked with climbing up this monstrosity is Nicholas Hoult, hot off the zombie romantic comedy "Warm Bodies," as the title character. In staying mostly true to the story's origins, Jack is a poor farm boy whose uncle sends him on an errand to sell the family horse. Instead he comes back with — you guessed it — beans. But they're magic beans, so it's cool.

While visiting the kingdom of Cloister that day, though, he also locks eyes briefly with a mysterious young woman. Turns out she's the princess, Isabelle (Eleanor Tomlinson), who has escaped her overprotective father (Ian McShane) in disguise to get a taste of what the real world is like. Her security detail, led by the loyal Elmont (Ewan McGregor), quickly whisks her away from Jack but they've clearly made a connection.

A subsequent escape on a rainy night throws these two together again — but this time, one of those magical beans gets tragically wet. Boom — beanstalk, one that sends the princess high in the sky, all the way up to a long-forgotten land full of isolated and really angry giants.

There aren't a whole lot of surprises here — if you know the story, you know what happens — although "Jack the Giant Slayer" features several inspired visuals, including an incredibly cool scene in which several beanstalks sprout in an unexpected direction. Hoult and Tomlinson are fine together — there's nothing outlandish about either of their performances — but they do have a nice chemistry with each other.

And they make room for some of the showier performances amid the strong supporting cast, including Stanley Tucci as the duplicitous Roderick, whom the king initially believes is an ideal husband for his precious daughter but who quickly reveals his untrustworthiness and hunger for power.

And speaking of scenery chewing, these giants are fearsome and fully realized creatures with the help of motion-capture technology, especially Bill Nighy as their sadistic, two-headed leader. These are not bumbling behemoths but rather nimble warriors with a taste for blood who put the fright back into fee-fi-fo-fum.

"Jack the Giant Slayer," a New Line Cinema release, is rated PG-13 for intense scenes of fantasy action violence, some frightening images and brief language. Running time: 117 minutes. Three stars out of four.

March is the best time for trophy smallmouth bass

By Lee McClellan
Kentucky Afield

FRANKFORT – Female smallmouth bass in lakes such as Laurel River Lake, Green River Lake, Lake Cumberland and Kentucky Lake grow hungry in early spring as water temperatures slowly warm to 50 degrees. The water temperatures in these lakes range from the mid to high 40s right now.

They need to feed to nourish the eggs developing down in their abdomens for the upcoming spawn. You need to put a hair jig, tailspinner, or blade bait in front of their noses during the next month or so.

"Once the water temperatures start into the 50s, the large female smallmouth start gorging themselves to continue forming the egg mass in their bodies," said Gerry Buynak, assistant director of fisheries for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "Eggs make up about 3 to 5 percent of their body weight now and will grow to about 15 percent of body weight right before spawn."

Buynak, who previously served as a black bass biologist for many years, said the percentage of body weight from the eggs can grow to as high as 20 percent right before the spawn. That is a lot of eating those big females need to do between now and April, when reservoir smallmouth reproduce.

Finding late winter smallmouths in these reservoirs requires looking at things with a totally different perspective than you would for largemouth bass. You need acres and acres of big, deep water near your fishing spots.

Points near the old river or major creek channel are great places to start prospecting for early March smallmouths. "There are good smallmouth bass in Green River Lake size-wise for sure," said Eric Cummins, southwestern fisheries district biologist for Kentucky Fish and Wildlife. "You just need to pick your spots. The most productive area is the lower end near the dam."

Map study reveals the Green River channel swings close to points in the lower section of the Green River arm of the lake while Robinson Creek does the same near the dam. Slowly probe these points with a 3/8-ounce black hair jig with no trailer, letting the lure settle on each rock shelf of the point as it sinks. A tailspinner fluttering down the sides of these points draws strikes from large smallmouths.

KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE RESOURCES PHOTO

Anglers have the best chance of the year in the month of March to catch trophy smallmouth bass such as these two beauties held by Ryan Kausing, fisheries technician for Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

Laurel River Lake may be the best lake in Kentucky to catch a trophy smallmouth. John Williams, southeastern fisheries biologist for Kentucky Fish and Wildlife, said a fishing partner of his caught a 23-inch smallmouth recently that weighed nearly 7 pounds.

Points that extend out into the lake and coves with a channel near their mouths are great places to try. Small silver and blue swimbaits worked slowly down points work well right now on Laurel. Swimming a 4-inch pearl curly-tailed grub across channel drops in the coves draws smallmouths in early March as well on this lake.

Pick an overcast, dark day to fish Laurel as the lake's extremely clear water makes smallmouth skittish. A day with misty, light rain is best.

Lake Cumberland continues to produce healthy, fat smallmouth bass. The small cuts along the main lake from Harmon Creek to the dam make excellent places to rip a metal blade bait, such as the Silver Buddy, off the bottom for smallmouths.

Slowly work a tailspinner just above bottom right in the heart of the small v-shaped coves along the main lake and in the mouths of major creek arms for Cumberland smallmouths.

Fisherman's catch breaks first Georgia record since 2010

THOMSON, Ga. – A Georgia fisherman has reeled in the state's first record-breaking catch in more than two years.

The state Department of Natural Resources says Thomas Lewis of Grovetown caught a yellow perch weighing 2 pounds, 9 ounces from the Savannah River on Wednesday. It's the first state record-breaking fish of any species recorded in Georgia since 2010.

Lewis' catch broke the previous state record for yellow perch by one ounce. The previous record fish was caught in 1980 on Lake Burton and was tied by a yellow perch of the same weight hooked in the Savannah River in 2008.

Indiana reports record 136,428 deer killed in 2012

INDIANAPOLIS – The state Department of Natural Resources reports hunters in Indiana took advantage of changes in equipment regulations and extra hunting dates to kill a record 136,248 deer last year.

The previous record was 134,004 in 2010.

Division of Fish & Wildlife spokesman Mitch Marcus says the state made changes last year to make it easier to harvest antlerless deer. Those changes included making crossbows legal for all licensed hunters during archery season; adding a special late antlerless season in designated counties; extending the urban zone season to run continuously from Sept. 15 to the end of January; and allowing youth hunters in the two-day youth season to take whatever the bonus antlerless quota was in the county where they hunted.

Hunter education course coming up

A free hunter education course will be offered April 1 and April 2 from 6-9 p.m. and April 3 from 4:30-8 p.m. at the Sportsman's Club of Henderson County (7144 Sportsman's Club Road off 416 by the Pennyrile, exit 68, in Robards).

The 10-hour course, sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources and the Sportsman's Club of Henderson County, will include classroom instruction in hunter ethics, wildlife conservation and identification, field care of game, outdoor survival, first aid, trapping, firearms, bow hunting, muzzleloading and ammunition.

Participants must be present all three nights. The last session will include actual range firing and examination. Anyone 10 years old or older is welcome. Food and soft drinks will be available.

For more information contact Bob McKee at (270) 526-3023 or Robert.McKee@ky.gov.

Scouting combine shows NFL's global progress

Prospects from overseas are on the increase

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS – Ezekiel "Ziggy" Ansah knew nothing about the NFL when he was growing up. Now, he could be a first-round pick in April's draft.

Ansah played soccer in Ghana as a kid, came to America to play basketball at Brigham Young and, after getting cut twice, finally took the advice of his track coach and tried out for football. The first time he put on football pads, as a sophomore in 2010, he looked like the Michelin man with things in all the wrong places. Until last fall, he had never started a game.

These days, NFL scouts are drooling over his potential.

"I try to stay up late and watch NFL Network. I see some things," Ansah said. "This is going to be my life, so I just try to suck it all in."

Ansah has been a sponge in this new world order of pro football, where anyone on Earth seemingly can apply for a job. Some men who made it to this year's 333-player combine were born or reared in Australia, England, Estonia, Germany, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia and Tonga.

Sure, the NFL has a history with players from the Pacific Rim and Africa. Some fans will remember Christian Okoye, nicknamed the Nigerian Nightmare, or Jack Thompson, known as the Throwin' Samoan.

Maybe this should have been expected given the league's conscientious effort to expand its global reach, though the NFL still lags behind Major League Baseball, the MLS, the NBA and the NHL. NFL officials have been scheduling regular-season games annually in London since 2007 and will play two regular-season games there in 2013. Buffalo has played five times in Toronto and has signed an agreement to play at least one game per season there for the next five years. The NFL also has staged preseason games in Mexico City and Tokyo in the past.

Twice, league officials tried to create a European developmental league, a venture that ended in 2007.

But now the results are rolling in.

Ansah played well at the Senior Bowl in January and only cemented his top 15 status by measuring in at 6-foot-5, 271 pounds and finishing the 40-yard dash in 4.63 seconds. Some have questioned his practice habits, but the one guy who has worked up close and personal with him, Lions coach Jim Schwartz, disagrees. Schwartz coached Ansah during Senior Bowl week.

"I think the most important thing in football and scouting is how they play," Schwartz said. "He played well in the game and just like this — it's important what you run a 40, it's important how many times you can bench 225 (pounds), but the thing that's most important and what you can't lose sight of is what the game day looks like. And he's done a good job and has put together some good game tape."

Ansah might be the first player from this year's foreign contingent to hear his name called.

It's a virtual certainty he won't be the last.

Estonia's Margus Hunt has been turning heads, too, since giving up on becoming an Olympic discus thrower and shot putter to pursue a career in football. He went to SMU for one reason: training with the Mustangs' track coach. But with the program no longer in existence, former NFL coach June Jones allowed him to walk onto his football team, much to the dismay of his fans back home who once referred to football as a "stupid sport."

After a solid showing at the scouting combine, Hunt's stock is rising, too. Scouts see the 6-8, 277-pound defensive lineman as a pass rusher.

"I had a really challenging situation in Estonia where I couldn't train because I was ranked No. 4 or No. 5 in the country (in throwing) and they only train the top two or three, so I came here," he said.

What other foreigners could get picked?

Utah defensive tackle Star Lotulelei, a native of Tonga, was projected to be a high first-round pick until doctors at the combine discovered a heart condition. Florida State defensive lineman Bjoern Werner, a German native who started playing football after coming to the United States as a high school exchange student; Connecticut linebacker Sio Moore, who was born in Liberia and grew up in America; and Alabama defensive tackle Jesse Williams, who grew up playing rugby in Australia.

Each played well enough in college to earn an invite to the combine.

"I think aggressiveness plays a pretty big part in playing the defensive line and especially hitting without pads and then here using pads," Williams said. "I wouldn't say it shaped my game, but it helped me being aggressive. I love this sport. I like being powerful and being able to control my body and use the techniques I have to be successful."

And they're becoming ambassadors for the sport, too. Ansah, Hunt and Moore all acknowledge they've spent hours teaching the game to family members and friends. They say once they understand the sport, they love it.

It's not just foreigners making inroads overseas, either.

Kentucky offensive lineman Larry Warford made a service trip to Ethiopia in May, USC quarterback Matt Barkley has done volunteer work in Mexico, Nigeria and South Africa, and BYU offensive lineman Braden Brown spent part of his free time in Ecuador. All have been able to explain or teach the game during their travels.

Perhaps that explains why there are now 64 nations with national federations of sport dedicated solely to American football, up from 40 in 2007.

"You will see a lot of development from France, Germany and Australia and they have the raw materials, too. If the NFL and the coaches would look outside players going to college, there are players in France and Austria that I think are ready to play in the NFL," said Tommy Wiking, president of the International Federation of American Football. "I would expect that you will see the same development that you have seen in ice hockey, basketball and baseball, and you will see a lot more international players in football."

MICHAEL CONROY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brigham Young defensive lineman Ezekiel "Ziggy" Ansah runs a drill at the NFL scouting combine on Feb. 25 in Indianapolis. Ansah might be the NFL's least likely first-round draft prospect. He grew up in Ghana playing soccer, came to America to play basketball at BYU and after getting cut twice, finally took the advice of his track coach and tried out for football. Now, this foreign-born athlete is on the verge of becoming a star.

Madison's 19th-century splendor one reason to visit this river town

MADISON, Ind. – A Hendersonian taking a stroll down the main street of this town might feel right at home.

There's the beautiful Ohio River running right by the downtown district bustling with lots of pleasure boats and commercial traffic and water recreation enthusiasts. There are opportunities to walk along the river and observe all of the activity.

There's the downtown brimming over with 19th-century architecture and the friendly small-town feel. There's a state park right on its edge.

Madison, which was one of three towns in the country to pilot a Main Street program, is located between Louisville and Cincinnati along a very scenic stretch of countryside about three hours' drive from Henderson. As noted, there's the Ohio River on one side and some rather high bluffs to the north.

Tot thinks Mammy's school sounds more appealing than his own

Four-year-old Hatcher Kanipe, son of Zach and Ashley Kanipe of Mount Carmel, Ill., was all ears while his dad was talking on his cellphone to "Mammy" Susie Bender in Henderson one afternoon while Hatcher's siblings were at basketball practice.

When the call ended, Hatcher asked his dad what they were going to do the next day.

"You've got to go to school," Zach responded, and when Hatcher whined an "Again?" he added: "You have to go to school every day."

With his grandmother fresh on his mind, Hatcher asked: "Is Mammy out of school?"

When Zach acknowledged that Mammy is indeed out of school, Hatcher responded: "Then I'm just going to Mammy's house and go to her school."

My cousin, a third-grade teacher in another part of the state, was a little bit apprehensive when one of her students approached her desk recently with the preliminary comment: "Mrs. Skaggs, I hope this isn't offensive ..."

Then the little girl finished with: "But you have a REALLY BIG ... phone."

Henderson County grandmother Becky Newman baby-sits two of her grandchildren, the children of Robby and Mary Beth Sutton of Corydon, and recently she has been working on potty training with her nearly 3-year-old grandson Elliott.

One morning she handed him a pair of "big boy underwear" and told him to go put them on.

In a little while, Elliott came back with the report that he couldn't wear them because "it's got a hole in it."

Hiding a smile, MeMe explained to him that it all right to put them on since all boys' underwear "has a hole in it."

Florida Panhandle offers fun for budget travelers

By Melissa Nelson-Gabriel
Associated Press

PENSACOLA, Fla. – The gleaming white sand beaches and turquoise waters of Florida's Panhandle draw millions of visitors each year, but this area isn't known for glitz, glamour and high-end hot spots like some of Florida's other beaches.

Instead, the Panhandle offers a laid-back vibe, Southern hospitality and family atmosphere. The region caters to budget-conscious travelers who often drive from nearby Southern cities like Atlanta, Birmingham or New Orleans.

Hotel and restaurant costs climb during the peak summer months, but even the priciest Panhandle resorts are generally less expensive than Miami Beach, Naples or the Florida Keys. And the Panhandle offers many opportunities for great memories visiting local attractions that cost nothing at all.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Travis Chunn prepares to fillet a fish in front of an amused group of onlookers on the docks in Destin, Fla., last October.

Beaches: From Pensacola in the western Panhandle to Apalachicola in the east, you'll find more than 200 miles of relatively undeveloped beaches.

Walk the sand in the early morning or late day to glimpse a spectacular sunrise or sunset over the Gulf of Mexico. Because the beaches don't get lots of traffic — except for a few towns that draw college spring breakers in March — shell seekers often make unique finds such as small conch shells and sand dollars. Beachgoers often glimpse pods of dolphins frolicking in the distance and schools of stingrays gliding just offshore.

During the busiest months, some beaches offer free outdoor concerts. Pensacola Beach offers live music every Tuesday night from April to October, http://visitpensacolabeach.com/what/bands.php.

National Naval Aviation Museum: The museum is located on Pensacola Naval Air Station and is open to the public 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, http://www.navalaviationmuseum.org/.

The museum offers an extensive collection of vintage military aircraft from all eras of flight and has numerous hands-on displays that give visitors a taste of what it was like to be a naval aviator through the generations.

On most Tuesday and Wednesday mornings March through November, 8:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m., the U.S. Navy's Blue Angels flight demonstration squadron practices in the skies above the museum, http://www.navalaviationmuseum.org/explore/blue-angels-practices.

Visitors are treated to a full, jaw-dropping performance by six of the world's best fighter pilots. Team members gather inside the museum after some practices for an autograph session with visitors.

Seaside: The picturesque village of Seaside — http://www.seasidefl.com/ — is located on the Gulf of Mexico between Destin and Panama City and includes some of the priciest beach homes in the region.

Developed in 1981 as a planned resort community, Seaside was the setting of the 1998 film, "The Truman Show," starring Jim Carrey.

Seaside is known for its pastel-colored beach bungalows built in the old Florida tradition and for its beautifully landscaped walkways and public areas. The town has a selection of upscale boutiques and restaurants, but there is lots of fun to be had in Seaside without spending any money.

This undated image provided by West Florida Historic Preservation Inc. shows the exterior of the T.T. Wentworth Jr. Florida State Museum in Pensacola, Fla.

Seaside often has live concerts during the evenings in its outdoor amphitheater. Visitors are encouraged to pack a picnic and enjoy the music; details at http://www.seasidefl.com/highlights/events-calendar/.

Wentworth Museum and historic Pensacola: A collection of historic homes, museums and other sites — http://www.historicpensacola.org/default.cfm — highlights Pensacola's history dating to the mid-1500s under Spanish, French, British, Confederate and American control.

Admission to the T.T. Wentworth Jr. Florida State Museum — http://www.historicpensacola.org/photo—gallery — images6fec. cfm — is free. The museum is open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

For a look inside the historic homes in Historic Pensacola Village, you can take a tour for $6. The University of West Florida Archaeology department often conducts digs in the area and visitors can get a close-up look at a dig in progress.

The Destin docks: The sign welcoming visitors to the well-known Panhandle resort city of Destin calls Destin "The World's Luckiest Fishing Village."

The sign is an homage to a time when the area was known for its fine snapper fishing and shrimping rather than high-rise condos, but fishing remains a huge part of local culture.

Destin has a large charter boat fleet and visitors can spend hundreds or thousands of dollars searching for marlin and mahi on a deep-sea fishing expedition.

For visitors who don't have their sea legs or who don't want to spend serious money trying their luck at offshore fishing, Destin's fishing docks still offer an entertaining stroll. Fishermen unload and clean their catch and display the fish for passers-by to view, and the large grouper, snapper and other fish are usually an impressive sight.

Harborwalk Village and the Emerald Grand resort — http://www.emeraldgrande.com/harborwalk-village. aspx — located on the west end of Destin, have a variety of seasonal events year-round and make a fun place for visitors to stroll before or after checking out the day's catch.

Takes lots of toys, books on airplane to occupy chatty tot

Trip Advisor

By Lesley Carlin
TripAdvisor.com

Q: What do you do if you have a very chatty child and you have to fly with him? My son is very verbal (he's 4) and isn't afraid to start a conversation with anyone. He's not going to cry or scream or kick seats — but can he ever talk.

Most people think it's cute, but he can go on and on and on. If the person beside him were trying to get work done, it would be pretty annoying. If we were in a group of three seats, I'd just put myself between him and the other passenger, but we're on a big plane and have two middle seats, so someone will definitely be next to him. Help!

A: I know exactly what you're talking about — I have quite the little conversationalist myself. First, don't decide who's sitting in what seat until you see who sits beside you.

If the passenger to your right is in a suit and carrying a laptop bag, and the passenger to your left is a young dad whose wife and kids are sitting in another aisle, put your son next to the young dad. Other parents are traveling parents' best friends.

Second, and I don't think I need to tell you this if you're taking the time to think about this in advance, pay attention to what's going on at all times. Don't get lost in a game on your phone or enthralled by the in-flight movie (no matter how amusing the redubbing of curse words is).

If the other passenger is showing signs of annoyance, or says, "That was an interesting story about Stonehenge, but now I'm going to work on my laptop," then you have to step in.

Tell your son it's time to stop chatting with the nice gentleman or lady because everyone would like some quiet time. Have a new and interesting toy or book (or a few) in your carry-on.

Load up your smartphone with games and a movie, and bring kid-sized headphones. Basically, bring anything that would distract your son and let the person beside him get some peace.

Q: My sister and I and our husbands and kids are going to Orlando for spring break. I think we should get a minivan that could carry all of us (six people total) and split the cost. My sister, however, thinks each family group should get its own car. This is more expensive. What do you think?

A: I would get the two cars. This way, you don't all have to do everything together. Think about it: If you only have one car, that means no choosing different restaurants.

If your sister's kid isn't feeling well and they want to leave the Magic Kingdom early, your family either has to cut your day short, too, or take a cab back to your hotel. The extra cost, in my opinion, is worth it.

New type of stink bug expected in Henderson County soon

JEFF PORTER
COLUMNIST

We have a new invasive insect pest in Kentucky known as the brown marmorated stink bug. The new stink bug was first found in Allentown, Pa., in 1998. The BMSB is native to China, Japan, Korea and Taiwan.

In 2010, the BMSB was first discovered in Kentucky in five counties in far eastern Kentucky and the two central Kentucky counties of Fayette and Jefferson.

In mid-January of this year, the new stink bug was discovered next door in neighboring Daviess County. So the likelihood of this pest being found in Henderson County in the near future is a sure bet.

BMSB has the characteristic shield-shaped stink bug body. The adults (with wings) are approximately 5/8 inch long with a mottled brown-gray body. The fourth segment of each antenna has a white band, which is a distinct identification characteristic.

Edges of the abdominal segments that extend laterally from under the wings are alternatively banded with black and white. The underside of the body is white to light gray with gray or black markings, and the legs are brown with faint white bands. There are several insects such as squash bugs, leaf-footed bug, spined soldier beetle and the brown stink bug that look very similar to the brown marmorated stink bug.

The BMSB can potentially be a pest to anyone as it can be an accidental invader in homes and other structures when weather gets cooler in the fall. When smashed, the bugs release an odor and can stain walls or other surfaces.

Cracks around windows, doors, siding, utility pipes and chimneys and underneath the wood fascia and other openings should be sealed with good quality silicone or silicone-latex caulk.

BMSB, like many stink bugs, feed on a wide range of plants including fruits, vegetables, ornamentals and some field crops. Significant losses to the insect have been reported from apple and peach orchards, blackberry, field and sweet corn, tomatoes, lima beans and green peppers from other states.

If you find one of these insects, collect the insect in a jar or other container safely without damaging the insect. Bring the insect sample to the Henderson County Cooperative Extension Service located at 3341 Zion Road.

For more information about the brown marmorated stink bug, visit http://pest.ca.uky.edu/EXT/BMSB/welcome.html or contact the extension service at 826-8387.

Tasks mount as warm weather approaches

By Joe Lamp'l
Scripps Howard News Service

With each passing year, the winters seem to be getting milder and milder. And with each day of warmer weather, my heart beats a little faster. To be sure, part of that would be attributed to nerves.

There is still much to do and I'm not nearly as far along as I thought I would be by now. And yet, I'm equally excited to get started in the garden again. Bring it on, ready or not!

There's no denying it — signs of spring are becoming more apparent earlier than I can ever recall.

Some ornamental fruit trees are in full flower already and the goldfinch line up at my bird feeders, each picking at the other for coveted space at the perches.

Daffodils started blooming weeks ago, and soon forsythia will share the stage, consistently the first shrub to fill its branches with brilliant yellow blooms.

As beautiful and welcome as these signs of spring are, it's also an important reminder that it's time to get busy with last-minute planning and preparation.

So what does one do this early in the season, when mornings are still frosty and snow is as likely as a common rain shower?

For me, starting seeds is a given. It's an easy way to get a jump on the season regardless of what type of weather is happening. I especially like to grow a few hard-to-find varieties, and save a ton of money in the process.

Plus, starting plants from seeds is how I've developed many skills that transfer to the garden and a great activity at this time of year in which to involve your nature-deprived children.

It's also prime time for prepping the garden beds that will play host to the many new plants I will add in just a few weeks.

Tending to those beds now, while they're still vacant and easily accessible, allows me to fortify the soil with rich organic matter, mainly compost.

The micronutrients will have ample time to settle in, too. By spring, my soil will be full of all the things my plants will need to thrive.

My tool of choice when it comes to prepping the beds is a good turning fork, also known as a spading fork. The sturdy thick tines are beefy enough to move and mix the soil and amendments, yet light enough to not wear you out prematurely.

And who can object to some much-needed outdoor exercise, while the air is still fresh and crisp?

As the grooming process begins for the year, my trusty pruners are always by my side as they will be for many months to come.

It won't be long now. Mother Nature waits not for me. I write these reminders as much for myself as anyone else.

Encino's hexagonal shape, windows offers great views

Special to The Gleaner

The Encino's imaginative floor plan, composed of three hexagonal modules joined by two rectangles, invites curiosity from onlookers and creates numerous interior angles.

This rustic-looking home is a natural for a woodsy site, or a sea or lakeshore lot, but is equally well-suited to an urban setting.

Despite its intriguing shape, the Encino is neither more complicated nor more expensive to build than others in the mid-size range. And although every room has an odd angle or two, each also has at least one square corner.

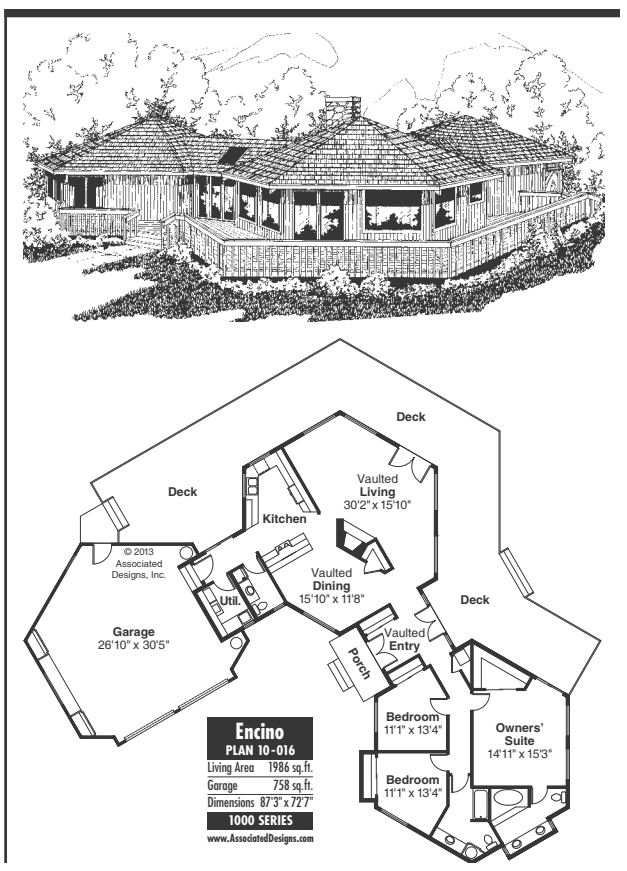

Vast expanses of glass in the living room and kitchen take advantage of a panoramic view to the rear, whether it be a natural setting or artful landscaping.

A wide rear deck unifies the elements and expands the already generous living space still further.

In the kitchen, a range/oven and microwave oven are centered in the eating bar that marks the juncture between kitchen and dining room.

A step-in pantry is nearby, and a small utility room and powder room are equally convenient to the kitchen and garage.

The owners' suite has a generous walk-in closet, double vanity, and an elevated spa tub. The Encino's other bedrooms share a bathroom with a combination bath and shower.

House plans

Visit AssociatedDesigns.com for more information or to search for home plans. A review plan of the Encino 10-016, including floor plans, elevations, section and artist's conception, can be purchased for $25. A home plan catalog, featuring more than 550 home plans, costs $15. Both are available online, by mail or phone. Add $5 s/h. Associated Designs, 1100 Jacobs Drive, Eugene, OR 97402, (800) 634-0123.

Friend should ask bridesmaid about lack of shower invitation

CARLEY RONEY
COLUMNIST

Q: I never got an invitation to my friend's bridal shower, despite the fact that she dubbed me an "unofficial bridesmaid." How should I address the situation without making a scene?

A: Before you freak out, this may just be a matter of your invitation getting lost in the mail or the bridesmaids assuming that you knew you were invited (and therefore not bothering to send out an invite).

So before you worry the bride — she may feel embarrassed if she finds out what happened — the best way to get to the bottom of it is to ask the maid of honor or another bridesmaid about it and see how she responds.

If it looks like the worst-case scenario and you were left off the guest list, then it may be time to calmly bring it up with your friend. Just let her know how much you've been looking forward to being at the party.

Your home can have high style even before the nest is empty

By Mary Carol Garrity
Scripps Howard News Service

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

There are lots of kid-friendly ways to make your home beautiful, despite the wear and tear that a family can bring.

If you have kids at home, from toddlers to teenagers, I have fabulous news for you: You don't have to wait until they leave home to infuse your home with high style.

There are lots of kid-friendly ways to make your home beautiful, despite the wear and tear that a family can bring.

Here are five tips for making your home look sensational and family-friendly:

1. Dress your walls in great art: If your kids are not at a stage of life where you can place accessories on your coffee table or end tables for fear of the accessories being broken, finish off your room by dressing your walls in imaginative artwork.

Think of art as accessories that hang, instead of sitting on a tabletop. When it's up on a wall, it's safe from little hands, and unless it gets hit by a flying basketball, it won't break.

Start by getting your furniture placed exactly where you want it. Then fill in the open wall space with art that expresses your family's spirit. What do you love?

Tell people through your artwork. It will not only become the focal point of your room, it will give people insight into what makes your family special.

2. Use an ottoman as a coffee table: Coffee-table ottomans are one of the greatest things to happen to family homes. They are attractive and perfect for little kids.

I can't tell you how many moms have told me that their babies learned to walk by scooting around a big ottoman. Others tell me their preschoolers like to curl up on top of the comfy ottomans, pop in their thumb and rest for a few minutes from their play. Now that is a family-friendly piece of furniture if ever there was one.

One great feature of a coffee-table ottoman is that if your kids accidentally decorate it with markers, or spill grape juice on it, or just love it until it's a bit threadbare, it can easily be recovered using just a few yards of fabric.

Another plus is that these ottomans look great with absolutely no decorations on top of them. Pick fabric that sports a fun pattern or arresting color, and you're good to go.

Some ottomans are tall enough for you to slide a storage basket filled with toys underneath, giving you bonus storage space. Don't want the basket to show? Pick an ottoman with a skirt.

3. Select beautiful but forgiving fabrics: When young moms (or people with pets) used to ask me to help them select fabrics for upholstered furnishings, I always teased that we needed to pick something the color of dirt.

But now, the sky is the limit when it comes to kid-friendly upholstered furniture, thanks to the revolution in outdoor fabrics.

Today's outdoor fabrics are absolutely gorgeous, not at all the stiff and shiny and unattractive stuff we used to put on the chaise lounge on the patio.

If outdoor fabric isn't for you, here's a recommendation I make to young moms that may sound crazy: Put white fabrics on your furniture.

I know — it may show dirt easier. But you can often clean up that little dribble of juice or pencil mark using a stain stick. Still doesn't sound appealing to you? Then go for fabric that camouflages dirt.

4. Dress up windows: One easy way to cozy up a room is by dressing windows with fabric panels. While there are always exceptions to the rules, most kids leave drapes alone. But still, select fabric that can handle the occasional jelly smudge.

5. Put your pretties up high: Miraculously, some kids seem to never bother child-safe accents that are displayed on tables or other spots within their reach.

But in my experience, most kids like to investigate, so if you want to use accents in your interior decor — especially those that are breakable — they must be displayed where the kids can't reach so the children run absolutely no risk of harming themselves.

If you love to decorate with breakables like plates and platters, mount the plates on the wall, above your kitchen cabinets or stove, where they can't accidentally be knocked down by a flying Nerf ball.

Another great place to decorate when your kids are very little is the fireplace mantel.

Usually the mantel is the focal point of the room, so if you are able to dress it up, no one will notice if your side tables are undecorated.

New book delves into world of processed foods

Special to The Gleaner

A new book that takes a close look at how high levels of salt, sugar and fat in processed foods has affected Americans' health is new on the shelves at the Henderson County Public Library.

Journalist Michael Moss immersed himself in the processed and packaged food industry to research the book.

FICTION

"Congo Dawn" by Jeanette Windle — Former Marine Lt. Robin Duncan is no stranger to corruption or conspiracy; she always knew the good guys from the bad guys. She thought her latest mission to the Congo would be no different from any of the others. But she and her security team realize that a ruthless conspiracy may end their mission in a deadly way.

"Temple of a Thousand Faces" by John Shores — Almost 1,000 years ago, Prince Jayavar of the Khemer people escaped a death sentence by the conquering Cham king, Indravarman. Exiled from their homeland, Prince Jayavar and his wife set up a secret camp with the intention of organizing an army to reclaim their kingdom. Temple of a Thousand Faces is a story of love, betrayal, and survival.

"The Tin Horse" by Janice Steinberg — It has been more than 60 years since Elaine has seen her twin sister Barbara, who ran away. Elaine had made peace with the loss of her sister, until now. Elaine was going through old papers in preparation for a move to a retirement home when she is stunned to find a clue as to where her sister went all those years ago.

NON-FICTION

"Salt Sugar Fat: How the Food Giants Hooked Us" by Michael Moss — Every year, the average American eats 33 pounds of cheese, which is triple what we ate in 1970. Americans consume 70 pounds of sugar each year or 22 teaspoons a day. Pulitzer Prize winning reporter Michael Moss shows how the most recognizable and profitable companies got us increased our consumption by doing research to calculate our "bliss point" and how these companies would cease to exist without salt, sugar, and fat.

"Song Without Words" by Gerald Shea — Much has been written about deafness, but very little covers the almost 30 million people in the United States that are partially deaf. Gerald Shea writes about how he compensated for partial deafness through much determination. He explores the significance of language, the meaning of deafness, and the controversy between advocates of signing versus oral education.

'The Borgias' popular with some fans, but reviews just so-so

By Rob Owen
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Q: I just love "The Borgias" and think it is so well-done.

However, it is never mentioned for awards and seems to be never talked about.

Jeremy Irons is so excellent and yet I have never seen him interviewed.

Does someone in power have a grudge against the producers of this show, and is "Borgias" returning this year?

— Elaine, 73, Bethel Park, Pa.

Rob: Yes, "The Borgias" will be back April 14.

As to why it doesn't get the acclaim Elaine thinks it deserves, while there are certainly fans of the show, I don't think the reviews have been as positive as those for "The Tudors," and that show didn't get a ton of awards, either.

The reality is, there are so many good shows on TV today that there's simply not enough awards to go around.

Q: We are fans of "Law & Order: U.K." (on BBC America, I believe). Has this been renewed? Will we be able to view it in the US.?

— Pat, 64, Minneapolis

Rob: British TV works differently from American TV. On American TV, programs air fairly consistently year-to-year. On British TV, that's not always the case.

"Law & Order: U.K." has been out of production for several years, which might lead one to conclude that it's done and over. But not so fast.

"I have hot news," said former "L&O: U.K." star Jamie Bamber last month at a news conference for his new TNT series "Monday Mornings."

"'Law & Order: U.K.' is actually about to come back after a very, very long hiatus, with a few cast changes," Bamber said. "The great and good of British theater and TV have wrestled together and came up with a new cast."

Whether those new episodes will air in the U.S. on BBC America remains to be seen.

Q: Can you tell me if "Harry's Law" will be renewed this year, and if not, why not? I really loved that show.

— Jack, 70, Bethel Park, Pa.

Rob: "Harry's Law" was canceled last May. It won't be back.

Q: If the ratings for "The Big Bang Theory" stay at or above the current bar through the 2013-2014 season (final season as contracted), would you expect CBS to sign on for a few more years?

— Steve, 45, Pittsburgh

Rob: Absolutely. A hit the magnitude of "Big Bang" is hard to come by. The question is, will the cast be game to return? My bet is it will be.

Q: Just finished watching a fairly well-done and entertaining season of "Underemployed" on MTV. Any word on a second season?

— Scott, 34, Pittsburgh

Rob: An MTV publicist said no decision has been made on the show's fate.

I've received no gloating emails from MTV about the show's ratings, which leads me to suspect "Underemployed" did not perform all that well and probably won't be back. Too bad. I liked "Underemployed," too.

Q: Please tell me that "Longmire" will be back for another season. What about "How to Make it in America" and "Gallery Girls"? Thank you.

— Sharon, 65, Minneapolis

Rob: HBO canceled "How to Make it in America" more than a year ago, but A&E renewed "Longmire" last summer and it will return with new episodes this summer.

A Bravo publicist did not respond to Sharon's question about "Gallery Girls."

That nonresponse, coupled with no buzz for the show, makes me think "Gallery Girls" will not be renewed.

Q: Will the TLC series "Little Couple" be returning?

— Sandra, 62, Apple Valley, Minn.

Rob: Yes, it will be back in April, but no specific premiere date has been announced.

Q: Can you tell me when the new seasons of "Episodes," "Web Therapy" and "Curb Your Enthusiasm" will start?

— Rob, Aspinwall, Pa.

Rob: Rob's question arrived the same day Showtime announced that "Web Therapy" will be back in the summer, but "Episodes" won't return for a third season until early 2014.

We've also reported previously that "Curb" is on hold while Larry David makes a movie for HBO.

Q: Do you know if Starz will release new episodes of "Magic City"?

— Leonard, 74, Pittsburgh

Rob: Yes, "Magic City" will be back for its second season this summer on Starz.

Bean dishes can warm cold winter night

By Daniel Neman
Toledo Blade

Cook up a dish of Roasted Chicken with Chickpeas and Carrots for a healthy, flavorful meal.

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

White-Bean Stew and Farro will warm up your insides on a cold day.

Rick Blaine, the hero of "Casablanca," had it wrong.

At the mist-shrouded airport, he tells Ilsa, the love of his life, that she needs to leave him and board the plane to freedom with her heroic husband, Victor.

"Ilsa, I'm no good at being noble," he says nobly, "but it doesn't take much to see that the problems of three little people don't amount to a hill of beans in this crazy world."

He says that as if beans were unimportant, as if they were expendable, as if they could be cast aside without a second thought.

What a disservice he does to the stately vegetable, how shabbily he treats the elegant legume.

Beans are an indispensable source of protein. Because they are so affordable and provide such a vital part of our nutrition, they are among the most widely consumed types of food on Earth. Some people even call them a magical fruit.

At this time of year, when the air is crisp and chilled, when the bitter wind stings our faces, what is better and more comforting than to come home to a big pot of beans steaming on the stove?

They're warming, they're hearty. There is nothing better to drive away the winter blues.

On a couple of particularly cold days recently, we decided to explore beans in a variety of ways.

We started out with a bean stew, flavored with rosemary and garlic, and served atop farro, an age-old grain that in recent years has become trendy again.

This particular recipe calls for dried beans, which need to simmer for two hours or so until they were soft. Only then could we begin to put together our stew. Once they were ready, into the beans went olive oil, garlic, an onion studded with a clove, and a bouquet garni of rosemary, thyme, and a bay leaf.

We let that pot simmer away merrily while the flavors blended. Meanwhile, we prepared the farro. When the beans were done, we pureed half of them, stirred them back into the pot, and served it on top of the nutty-tasting farro.

It was magic.

For a meat-based entree, we roasted a chicken over a melange of chickpeas, lemons and carrots. It was quite a healthy meal, except for the three tablespoons of butter that are rubbed into the chicken before cooking. That's how to get the skin so crispy, which is one of the dish's defining elements, but people watching their waistlines might want to eliminate that step.

The chicken was flavored with garam masala, a heady mixture of Indian spices. The beans and carrots on the bottom have both the garam masala and the lemons, an unexpected mixture that brought an exciting verve to the chickpeas and unified the dish into an exotic whole.

WHITE-BEAN STEW AND FARRO

Yield: 6 servings
Source: "Cook This Now," by Melissa Clark

INGREDIENTS

- 1 pound dried cannellini beans
- ¼ cup extra-virgin olive oil, plus more for drizzling
- 5 garlic cloves, peeled
- 1 celery stalk, cut in half lengthwise, leaves reserved
- 1 large onion, halved from root to stem
- 1 whole clove (stick it in an onion half)
- 2 rosemary sprigs
- 2 thyme sprigs
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 piece Parmesan rind, optional
- 2½ teaspoons kosher salt
- 1 cup farro
- Flaky salt
- ¼ teaspoon red pepper
- Chopped celery or parsley leaves for garnish, optional
- Lemon juice and/or grated Parmesan cheese for serving, optional

DIRECTIONS

1. If you have time, soak the beans in advance; put them in a large bowl and cover with several inches of water. Let sit overnight, or at least a few hours.
2. When ready to cook, drain the beans (if soaking) and place in a large pot over medium-high heat, along with oil, 3 of the garlic cloves, celery and onion. Bundle together the rosemary, thyme and bay leaf, tie securely with kitchen twine, and throw it into the pot. Add Parmesan rind, if using. Cover everything with water and stir in the salt. Bring to a boil, reduce heat to medium and simmer, partly covered, until beans are soft. This will take 1-3 hours, depending on how long you soaked the beans (if you did) and how old the dried beans were when you bought them.
3. If the pot starts to look dry before cooking is complete, add more water; at the end of cooking, the water should not quite cover the beans. If there is too much liquid, ladle out the excess.
4. While the beans are cooking, prepare the farro. Rinse thoroughly, then add to a large pot of boiling, salted water. Cook, according to directions on package, until softened. Drain well.
5. Mince the remaining 2 garlic cloves.
6. When the beans are cooked, remove and discard the onion, celery, herbs and optional Parmesan rind (you can leave the garlic in the pot). Ladle half the beans into a food processor or blender, add the minced raw garlic, and puree. Return the bean puree to the pot.
7. Serve the beans in bowls over the farro, drizzle each portion with plenty of olive oil, then sprinkle with flaky salt, red pepper and celery leaves or parsley. If the stew tastes flat, swirl in some lemon juice; grated Parmesan cheese on top is also nice.

CRISP ROASTED CHICKEN WITH CHICKPEAS

Yield: 4 servings
Source: "Cook This Now," by Melissa Clark

INGREDIENTS

- 2 lemons
- 2 (15-ounce) cans chickpeas, drained
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1½ tablespoons garam masala
- 3 teaspoons kosher salt
- 1½ teaspoons pepper
- 1 (3½-pound) whole chicken, rinsed and patted dry
- 4 thyme sprigs
- 3 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
- 1 pound carrots, peeled, trimmed, and cut into 1-inch rounds

FOR THE GREMOLATA

- 3 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
- ½ teaspoon finely grated lemon zest
- 1 small garlic clove, minced

DIRECTIONS

1. Preheat oven to 400. Quarter the lemons lengthwise and remove and discard any seeds. Thinly slice 6 of the lemon quarters crosswise (you will get little triangles) and, in a bowl, toss them with the chickpeas, oil, ½ tablespoon garam masala, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper.
2. Season the inside of the chicken cavity with 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Fill the cavity with the remaining lemon wedges and thyme sprigs. Rub the outside of the chicken all over with the remaining 1 tablespoon garam masala, 1 teaspoon salt, and ½ teaspoon pepper. Rub the butter all over the skin.
3. Scatter the carrots in the bottom of the largest roasting pan you have, the one you use for the Thanksgiving turkey. Place a wire roasting rack over the carrots; arrange the chicken breast-side up, on the rack. Roast 30 minutes, stirring carrots occasionally. Scatter the chickpea mixture into the bottom of the roasting pan. Continue to roast until the chicken's thigh juices run clear when pierced with a knife, 45-60 minutes longer. Let the chicken rest 5 minutes before carving.
4. Meanwhile, combine the parsley, lemon zest and garlic in a bowl. Spoon the carrot-chickpea mixture onto a platter; arrange the chicken on top. Sprinkle the gremolata over the dish and serve.

Knoxville festival seeking entries in biscuit-making contest

DONNA B. STINNETT
COLUMNIST

Do you make a great biscuit of some type or are you feeling creative? If so, it might be worth a little bit of money and worth a lot in bragging rights.

The International Biscuit Festival in Knoxville has begun accepting recipe submissions for the 2013 Bake Off to be held May 18.

The four categories of competition are Sweet Biscuits, Savory Biscuits, Special Biscuits and Student Biscuits.

The "special" category is for those biscuits that are over the top and incredibly imaginative. The student category features the next generation of bakers and is for entrants 18 and younger.

Each category will have three finalists chosen from all of the submitted recipes and those bakers will be invited to "bake live" in front of a panel of celebrity judges.

The grand prize winner will be chosen from the winners of the four biscuit categories.

Bake-off applications are available online at Biscuitfest.com. Submissions will be accepted until midnight April 22. Finalists will be notified and scheduled for the live competition.

For more information about the International Biscuit Festival (and additional winning recipes), go to biscuitfest.com or contact Chris Kahn at chris@biscuitfest.com.

CAJUN TATER BISCUIT

- 4 cups self-rising flour
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon baking powder

- 1 teaspoon cayenne pepper
- 1 cup shortening
- 2¼ cups buttermilk
- 3 teaspoon Crystal hot sauce
- 3 tablespoon olive oil
- 8 medium red potatoes (roasted)
- 5 garlic cloves (diced)
- 1 medium purple onion (diced)
- ½ red pepper (diced)
- ½ yellow pepper (diced)
- ½ green pepper (diced)
- 2 whole corn on the cobs (roasted)
- 1 cup cheddar cheese (shredded)
- ½ cup butter (melted)
- ½ pound Cajun compound butter (recipe below)

DIRECTIONS

1. Sift dry ingredients. Saute diced onion and garlic in 1 tablespoon olive oil till softened. Set aside.
2. Cut potatoes into ¼ inch pieces and lightly pan fry in 2 tablespoon olive oil until slightly crispy. Sprinkle with 1 teaspoon creole seasoning and set aside.
3. Cut corn kernels off the cobs and set aside.
4. Cut shortening in to dry ingredients using fingertips, until pea size flakes. Add 2 cups of buttermilk, 1 teaspoon Crystal hot sauce, potatoes, onion and garlic, diced veggies, corn and cheese. Mix by hand until just blended. Dump dough on to a floured surface and knead lightly. Pat into a 1-inch thick rectangle. Using a floured knife, cut into 12 squares.
5. Put biscuits on a greased parchment paper lined sheet pan. Blend ¼ cup of buttermilk with 1 teaspoons Crystal hot sauce and brush on to biscuits. Bake at 350 degrees for 5-7 minutes. Rotate pan. Bake another 5-7 minutes until golden. Brush with melted butter. Serve with a small dollop of whipped creole butter.
6. Whipped creole butter: Whip the following ingredients until blended: ½ softened pound butter, 1 teaspoon Crystal hot sauce, and 1 teaspoon finely chopped parsley. Chill in fridge until needed.

Making good use of Catalina coupons will help you save money

KASEY TRENUM
COLUMNIST

Question: What is a Catalina, and how can it save me money?

Answer: You will want to know what a Catalina is, because it can save big bucks on your shopping trips.

Some people call them Catalinas, and some may refer to these as "checkout coupons."

Catalinas print off on a tiny machine usually close to where your receipt prints off and offer incentives good on your next shopping trip to that retailer.

They are generally manufacturer coupons unless the Catalina states that it is a store coupon.

For example, some grocery stores offer both store and manufacturer coupons via the Catalina machine.

The store coupon may state $5 off any $15 baby purchase, while a manufacturer Catalina might read $2 off your next purchase of Tyson chicken. Typically you will have up to a month to redeem the Catalina on any program/incentive promotion.

When purchasing a product, look near the price tag to see if there is any special advertising for a Catalina deal with purchase. Sometimes these are clearly advertised, but many times they are not. That is why it is always important to check the Catalina machine before you leave the store to see which special deals printed out for you.

In some cases, the company that offers Catalinas bases its offers on your purchase. Chances are the coupon or deal offered is specific to your interest or previous purchases.

Should you encounter problems with the Catalina when shopping, don't panic.

For example, let's say there was a Catalina offer on crescent rolls. In this case, if you bought six crescent rolls, you get a Catalina for $4 off your next order. If your $4 Catalina didn't print, you should call the Catalina phone number to get your refund, instead of asking the store manager. This happens from time to time to customers, and here's why:

- Stores sometimes do not have the Catalina info updated in their registers toward the beginning of a sale.
- The Catalina machine is not working/turned on. (Check for green light.)
- Some of your items were not participating items. (Wrong ounce size or variety.)
- By calling 888-8COUPON, you can reach the Catalina company and quickly settle any issues.

I hope this helps a little, as Catalinas can be a great way to save money if you understand how the promotions work. Remember that you can usually roll Catalinas in with other savings.

Use them to buy the participating products again, thereby earning another Catalina.

They are just like money, so they should be kept in a safe place until you have the chance to use them. Also make note of expiration dates, since you don't want these valuable little pieces of paper to expire.

Secret ingredient of coffee boosts roasted pork's flavor

By J.M. Hirsch
AP food editor

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Coffee adds deep, rich taste to Cherry-Topped Coffee-Roasted Pork Tenderloin.

Coffee has become my new favorite ingredient when roasting meat.

It's an effortless way to add gobs of flavor to whatever I am making. All I do is add whole coffee beans to whatever spice blend I am using as a wet or dry rub, then grind it to a powder and apply to the meat.

The coffee provides deep, rich flavors with just a hint of acid. It's a combination that works wonders for roasted meat.

I've tried the spice-coffee combination called for below on both beef and pork tenderloins; both were fantastic. You also could use it on chicken breasts or thighs for a "blackened" chicken.

The seasonings can be applied to the meat right before roasting. But if you have a little extra time, the flavor is even better if you rub the spices on the meat, then refrigerate it for several hours before roasting. And if you'd rather use these flavors in a wet rub, don't hesitate to add a little olive or canola oil to the blend.

If you're looking for a simple and speedy dinner, make the roasted pork tenderloin in this recipe and serve it as is with a side salad or some roasted vegetables.

Or for something party-worthy (perhaps an Oscars viewing party), slice it, slap it on rounds of baguette, then top with a dollop of cherry jam. For the latter variation, the pork can be served warm or room temperature.

CHERRY-TOPPED COFFEE-ROASTED PORK TENDERLOIN

An electric spice grinder (or coffee grinder) is the easiest way to make the spice rub for this recipe. If you don't have one, substitute an equal amount of ground coffee for the beans, then use a mortar and pestle or food processor to grind everything together.
Start to finish: 35 minutes
Makes 36 appetizers

INGREDIENTS

- 1 tablespoon coffee beans
- 1 teaspoon garlic powder
- 1 teaspoon fennel seeds
- 1 teaspoon smoked paprika
- 1 teaspoon whole peppercorns
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 3 pounds pork tenderloins
- 1 baguette, thinly sliced into 36 rounds
- Olive oil
- 1 10-ounce jar cherry jam

DIRECTIONS

1. Heat the oven to 400 F. Line a rimmed baking sheet with foil and coat with cooking spray.
2. In a spice grinder, combine the coffee beans, garlic powder, fennel seeds, paprika, peppercorns and salt. Grind until the beans and seeds are finely ground. Rub the spice-coffee blend evenly and liberally over the pork tenderloins. Set the tenderloins on the prepared baking sheet, then roast for 20 minutes, or until they reach 145 F at the center. Remove from the oven and let rest for 5 minutes.
3. Meanwhile, brush the baguette slices with olive oil, then arrange on a baking sheet and toast for 2 minutes, or until just barely browned.
4. When the pork is ready, cut it into thin slices. To serve, place one slice of pork on each piece of baguette, then top with a small dollop of cherry jam.

Mushroom Spinach Quesadillas are a good way to get your kids to eat spinach.

Quesadillas make spinach fun

By Gretchen McKay
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Popeye might have loved his spinach, but it can be tough to get kids (and some adults) to eat the leafy green vegetable. I say, hide it inside a cheesy quesadilla, paired with garlicky sauteed mushrooms.

You don't need any special equipment to make this super-easy recipe, just a hot pan or skillet. Serve with sour cream and/or guacamole and salsa for dipping.

MUSHROOM SPINACH QUESADILLAS

Serves 4.
Source: Chili Pepper magazine, October/November 2012 (www.chilepepper.com)

INGREDIENTS

- 8 ounces button mushrooms
- 10 ounces fresh spinach
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 small onion, diced
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- Salt and pepper, to taste
- 1 tablespoon vegetable oil
- 8 10-inch flour tortillas
- 2 cups Monterey Jack or habanero cheese, shredded

DIRECTIONS

1. Clean mushrooms with a damp paper towel, remove stems and cut into thin slices.
2. Place spinach in a large pot of salted boiling water and quickly blanch. Remove and place in a large bowl of icy water. Allow to cool, remove and squeeze out excess water. Roughly chop and set aside.
3. Melt butter in a skillet over medium heat. Add onion, garlic, mushrooms, salt and pepper. Cook about 5 minutes. Mix in spinach to reheat, then remove from heat and set aside.
4. In a small skillet, heat oil over medium-low heat. Place 1 tortilla, a layer of cheese, spinach mixture and a little more cheese and top with another tortilla. Press down to adhere both sides and melt cheese, and cook about 3 minutes on each side, until golden brown.
5. Cut into 4 wedges and serve. Repeat with the rest of the tortillas.

Take time now to get started on vital estate-planning process

AMANDA HARDY
COLUMNIST

Have you ever asked yourself the "what if" questions? What if something should happen to me today? What if something should happen to my spouse or business partner? What if I have an accident that leaves me incapacitated?

No one likes to think about these questions. However, the answers are very important to your surviving family members.

Taking the time to answer those questions can provide peace of mind. It also can mean that your wishes for asset distribution following death will be followed.

If you should die without some form of an estate plan in place, such as a will, your property and other assets will be distributed according to Kentucky state law.

Dying without a will is known as dying intestate. If you do not wish to have your assets distributed according to state law, then you will need to develop your own estate plan.

The estate-planning process can be quite simple, depending on the size and complexity of your estate. The first step is to get organized by gathering important information and documents.

Start by making a list of your assets, or everything that you own. Include all property, your home, farm property, rental property and other business assets. Additionally, list other investments and assets, such as stocks, bonds, retirement plans, insurance policies, banking accounts and cash.

As you list your assets, be certain to note how each asset is titled. For example, are you the sole owner, a joint owner with your spouse, or does the asset, such as a life insurance policy, have a specific beneficiary listed?

Once you have completed a list of all assets, make a similar list of all debts owed, such as mortgages, car loans, credit cards, installment debts, etc. If you subtract your total debts from your total assets, the result will be your net worth.

Organizing the paperwork associated with your assets and liabilities will be important to your family members when your estate is settled.

As you prepare the list of your assets and debts, also note the locations of important paperwork. You may consider purchasing a small fire-proof safe to consolidate all important papers into one place.

Once you have an inventory of your assets, discuss with your spouse and other family members how you would like to distribute your assets to meet your estate-planning objectives. Remember, communication is important throughout the estate-planning process.

Sharing your estate-planning objectives with family members will help them better understand the choices you make in asset distribution. Often, a spouse or close family member is asked to be the executor of an estate; the executor ensures that your assets are distributed according to your estate plan.

The final step is to work with an attorney to put your plans on paper. Depending on the size of your estate, you may also need to work with your accountant, financial planner or others to develop your complete estate plan.

To locate an attorney, talk with friends and family members who may have recently completed an estate plan. Don't be afraid to interview two or three attorneys to find a lawyer which meets your specific needs.

In addition to helping you put your plans on paper, an attorney will also be able to assist you in understanding and developing other estate-planning tools such as power of attorney, trusts or gifting.

Remember, estate planning is too important of a topic to delay.

Advice

Husband trying to broker peace in family

Dear Amy: More than 30 years ago my fundamentalist parents did everything they could to prevent my wife and me from marrying (we were atheists).

My brothers either kept neutral or sided with my parents. My wife would have nothing to do with them after we were married.

My parents are now gone. My brothers have since tried to be nice to my wife, but she resists. I visit my brothers' families by myself.

I understand her position, but I feel she should at least try to be part of the family because they have been more welcoming.

I feel she should let bygones be bygones. This is the only bone of contention between my wife and me.

— Want Peace

COLUMNIST

Dear Peace: One of the biggest challenges in family relationships is to grasp (and then truly accept) this reality: You cannot have people's relationships for them.

Sometimes you can influence or mediate between people to broker a sort of peace, but essentially (and unfortunately) the relationship is really controlled and maintained by the opposing parties.

What this means is that your wife can choose not to accept various olive branches extended her way.

She can choose not to forgive people who were once cruel to her. She can passively stay in a state of sadness or anger without trying to change.

It may be that your wife simply does not care.

Not seeing them is one less unpleasant item on her list.

You can continue to try to encourage your family, and your wife, to come together.

You can encourage each party to try harder (for instance, have your family members actually acknowledge what they did and ask for forgiveness? That would be a start).

But here's what you can actually accomplish: very little, besides acceptance.

You need to manage your own anxiety over this.

You cannot force her to see people, and she cannot force you to stay away.

Dear Amy: For the past few years I have been going through what I describe as my "medical mystery tour": The doctors all agree that there is something wrong, but they haven't yet discovered exactly what is causing my medical problems.

One of the symptoms I am experiencing is that I cannot keep on weight. While I have always been on the small and scrappy side, I am currently quite skeletal.

My dilemma is that when people ask about my health and I mention this, I am almost always greeted with some form of "Gee, I wish I had that problem."

I understand that they mean no harm. I don't want to embarrass anyone, so I usually quip something lighthearted and move on to another subject.

This whole thing — my illness and the pressure of trying to get better — is getting exhausting. Can you suggest a way to respond that will put people on notice that I am sick and scared, and even a little insulted?

— Scary Thin

Dear Scary: You should realize that people tend to have an extremely complicated way of responding to another's illness.

Either they launch into a story about something that happened to them or their sister-in-law's cousin, or they try to joke, dismiss or diminish the reality of what is happening to you.

These quips are really expressions of fear. It might help you to realize this.

You can respond very simply and effectively by saying, "No, you really don't want this problem. I assure you."

Old magazines can still be used in many ways

Dear Readers: What to do with old magazines:

■ Give to doctor's offices, hospitals, etc.

■ Use for collages or scrapbooks.

■ Recycle them.

■ Give to school or after-school programs.

■ Use as packing material.

Be sure to remove the mailing label before giving them away.

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I would like the formula for newspaper that bleaches the paper but not the print.

— Leona in Metairie, La.

Dear Leona:

Make a solution of liquid milk of magnesia and club soda: Mix 2 tablespoons of milk of magnesia and 32 ounces of club soda.

COLUMNIST

Once mixed, put the solution in the refrigerator for eight hours.

Next, put the solution in a shallow pan. Soak each clipping for one hour (one clipping at a time).

Carefully remove and put each clipping in between layers of white paper towels. Allow to dry on a flat surface.

Newspapers are not made with the same paper they once were, so your results may vary.

Your best bet is to try to copy or scan the clippings. If you don't have a computer or copier, try one of the copy and print stores.

Pray wayward son comes to his senses

Dear Rev. Graham: How do you know when to rebuke someone for the way they're living, and when to lay off and just pray they'll wise up and turn to God?

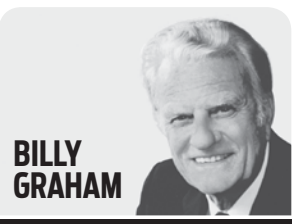

This is the situation with our son. He's let us know he's tired of us getting after him, but we're still concerned.

— Mrs. E. O'D.

Dear Mrs. E. O'D: It's not always easy to know when to speak and when not to speak in situations like this; as the Bible says, there is "a time to be silent and a time to speak" (Ecclesiastes 3:7).

If we know someone is headed toward moral and spiritual disaster, why wouldn't we rebuke them and try to make them realize what will happen?

But if they steadfastly refuse to listen, then sometimes the only thing we can do is let them know we still love them and pray for them, even if we don't approve of what they're doing.

COLUMNIST

They know where we stand, and it's better to try to keep our relationship alive than cut it off. If they do come to their senses later on, they'll be more likely to come back to us.

Do you remember Jesus' parable of the Prodigal Son? (You can read it in Luke 15.)

I'm sure the father repeatedly warned his son of the dangers he faced because of his rebellion, but the son refused to listen, and his father finally let him go.

Eventually, the son's sins caught up with him and he returned to his father — who joyously welcomed him home. God does the same with us.

Pray for your son, knowing that God is able to do what you cannot, and He can influence his life even when you can't.

Remember: God "is able to do immeasurably more than all we ask or imagine" (Ephesians 3:20).

Managing risk factors best approach for preventing aneurysm

Dear Dr. Roach: I have a family history of aortic aneurysm. My father was diagnosed with one at approximately 70 years of age. His was found when he was going to surgery for other problems, and the aneurysm was successfully repaired.

My brother died of a ruptured aortic aneurysm at the age of 63, and my sister died of an aortic aneurysm at the age of 64.

All three of my family members smoked and were overweight. I was checked four years ago, and at that time had no signs of an aneurysm.

I have been advised that they do run in families. I have a few questions: How often should I be checked? Should my children/grandchildren be checked, and if so, at what age?

Do smoking and being overweight contribute to the development of aortic aneurysms?

DR. KEITH ROACH
COLUMNIST

— K.K.

Dear K.K.: An abdominal aortic aneurysm is a dilation of the aorta, the main blood vessel that takes the blood from the heart to the rest of the body.

As the dilation grows, the walls of the aorta progressively become weaker, until the dilation exceeds 5 cm, at which point it is at such high risk for rupture, it should be surgically repaired.

AAAs are much more common in men, and are much more common in smokers and in people with high blood pressure.

The standard guideline is to check all men with any history of smoking for AAA once between ages 65 and 75, but not women.

However, guidelines are just guidelines, and there are clinical situations in which additional screening is appropriate.

Probably the most important advice I can give you and your family is to manage your risk factors as much as possible.

Nobody should ever smoke, but given your family history, it's even more important. Even moderate high blood pressure should be treated.

As far as screening goes, it would be reasonable to screen first-degree relatives (meaning your siblings and your brother's and sister's children) somewhere around the age of 60.

I also would consider taking another look at your aorta, especially if you were ever a smoker or had high blood pressure. If not, or if the repeat shows no dilation at all, then your risk is low.

Dear Dr. Roach: I have been diagnosed with diverticulosis, and have been advised that I am at risk of developing diverticulitis.

Can you elaborate on precisely what each of these diagnoses consists of, the level of risk involved in moving from one to the other and what I might do to mitigate such risk? Thanks in advance for your help.

— V.L.

Dear V.L.: Diverticula are small outpouchings in the wall of the colon. The condition of having them is called diverticulosis.

These can cause problems most commonly through infection and by bleeding.

When they become inflamed, usually through infection, it is called diverticulitis — the "itis" indicating "inflammation."

Eschewing nuts and seeds has long been recommended to prevent diverticulitis, although one recent study questioned whether this is important.

Diverticulitis usually is associated with both pain and fever, and is treated with antibiotics.

Many surgeons recommend removal of the affected part of the colon, if possible, after an episode of diverticulitis, since the likelihood of recurrence is high.

Bleeding usually comes from diverticulosis without diverticulitis.

Dr. Roach regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but will incorporate them in the column whenever possible. ## Son's dorm-room display shows mom true meaning of love

"The best way to keep children at home is to make the home atmosphere pleasant, and let the air out of the tires."

— Dorothy Parker

By Kathleen McNamara
Chicken Soup for the Soul

No more delays. We wriggled into the family car, arranging assorted arms and legs around the belongings of our older son Ian, the almost-college student.

He placed one last bag on my lap, crammed himself into an impossibly small space in the back seat next to his brother Tom, and the four of us were off.

We had triumphed over the challenge many parents face at the beginning of a college school year: fi tting an infinite number of items into the finite space of an automobile.

We got creative. If it weren't for the microwave ("Mom, a man, a microwave — a meal.") and the mini-fridge ("Mom, leftovers for the microwave."), we might have pulled it off. Instead, we cheated a little by borrowing a neighbor's car-top luggage carrier.

Although we all felt achy by the end of the trip, Ian was so thrilled to be starting his new life, he never complained.

Tom, realizing he wouldn't have to share a darn thing until Ian came home for Thanksgiving, was equally cheerful during the six-hour ride.

So much for lingering farewells at the dorm. It was obvious Ian itched for us to leave. We gave him a big hug and left.

I was stoic on the trip home. But I dissolved at the sight of Ian's quilt, left in the hallway. My firstborn was gone.

For several weeks, I busied myself with my job and family affairs. November came, and Ian arrived for his first vacation. It was a joy until he left, and then my blues started again. Nothing anyone said made me feel better.

I sent packages almost weekly. Sometimes just a small packet with news clippings or cookies, but occasionally I'd send clothes or other necessities. They were the therapy that got me through that first year.

It was only when we cleaned out Ian's dorm room at the end of the school year that I faced reality: Neatly stacked in one corner, from ceiling to floor, were all the empty boxes from the goodies I had sent.

The sculpture testified to a mom's love — and provided an on-going source of amusement to Ian and his friends. Some placed bets on how high the stack would reach.

Ian had told me to phone whenever I wanted, but I always hesitated to interrupt his life. The sheer height of the boxes made me glad I'd only sent packages.

Each semester grew easier, and I sent fewer boxes.

Four years later, Tom left for college. I knew women who collapsed into emotional downslides after their last child left home and worried I'd be among them.

Even before we deposited Tom, I felt numb. But something happened after we left the dorm. My husband and I got out the map to decide the return route we'd take.

And then it hit me: It didn't matter how long we took getting home. There was no one to check on, no one who needed anything. Amazingly, we were free to take our delicious time, stopping whenever and wherever we wanted.

It took us three days to drive the six-hour trip!

We took long walks, woke up when we felt like it, and ate at nice restaurants. I lazed in the morning wearing only a nightgown, no longer concerned about who would see me. Why hadn't I been told it could be like this?

Of course I miss my sons. They are the biggest blessings in my life. But this new chapter must be embraced, not dreaded.

I see a path filled with opportunities I never imagined. A menu overflowing with choices.

Now, what should I do first?

Veggie program hinders organizing meals

By Sarah Welch
getbuttonedup.com

Two years ago right around this time, I was bursting with enthusiasm for my budding skills as a weeknight chef.

One of the side effects of my goal to get a healthful homemade dinner on the table each night was that I became increasingly aware of, if not downright alarmed by, the toxins in so many of the foods we consumed.

I became a label-reader. I made the shift to organic wherever I could. I stopped buying anything with corn or soy in it because of the high likelihood the corn or soy was genetically modified (or, as my oldest likes to say, "dramatically modified"). I started shopping for produce and eggs at the local farmers market. I even went so far as to make my own ghee.

In short, I went from pretty laissez-faire about our food to totally crunchy in about six months. Strange for someone who had always been a bit of a ne'er-do-well when it came to food. (I like my sugar. And my meat.)

Based on my granola progression, I suppose it's not surprising that I signed up for a summer CSA (Community-Supported Agriculture) program in my area. I paid $400 in late winter/early spring to ensure that I'd get a box of fresh, locally produced organic veggies delivered right to my doorstep once a week. I loved the idea that we were helping mitigate a local farmer's risk and that I would cut down on my shopping needs as well.

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

If you're struggling to stay organized or manage your time more effectively, a box of surprise veggies, delivered on a day that may not be optimal for you, can throw off your routines.

Cut to June. My first box arrived and I felt like a kid at Christmas. I ripped it open and smiled at the mustard greens, rainbow chard and other lovely green things staring back at me.

But it was a different story by the end of summer.

My veggie bin quickly became an overstuffed disaster — filled to the brim with wilting greens and random items (daikon radish?) I had no idea how to prepare. My family was starting a full-fledged revolt against all the kale. And I felt incredibly guilty because each week I was throwing out more and more produce that had passed its prime.

But probably worst of all, because I was never sure what would be in my farm share box until it arrived on a Tuesday morning, I was paralyzed when it came to menu-planning. I have always liked to do my menu organization on Saturday mornings and then shop between Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening. The Tuesday delivery threw a monkey wrench in that habit, and I couldn't ever seem to get the hang of menu-planning mid-week. Once I became paralyzed on that front, I backslid into less-healthful dinner habits (ahem, pizza delivery!).

I have never been so happy for a program to come to an end.

It pains me to say that, but it is true.

To this day, whenever any of my boot-camp clients ask me about farm shares, my advice is usually to skip it. They are wonderful in theory — and probably perfect for the woman who is a MacGuyver in the kitchen.

But if you're already struggling to stay organized or manage your time more effectively, a box of surprise veggies, delivered on a day that may not be optimal for you, will throw off your routines. And once you're off your routine — well, the slide into chaos isn't far behind.

In the end, it's less expensive and more efficient for me to shop for the items on my weekly menu plan at the local farmers market. So that's how I support local organic agriculture.

Is this true for you, too? Or am I being too harsh? If you've ever signed up for a CSA, I'd love to hear from you.

Saturated colors go well with stainless

Home & Garden Television

What are the hottest colors to pair with stainless-steel appliances? Find out from our designers!

Although there are many appliances in black, white and other colors on the market today, stainless steel is still the most popular choice, says Bob Garner, president of the National Kitchen and Bath Association.

This is undoubtedly one reason that deep, dark paint colors are becoming more popular for kitchens.

"Although kitchens have traditionally been painted white or pale colors, there is a major movement today toward saturated colors," says Margaret Walch, director of The Color Association of the United States. "Because stainless steel reflects a lot of light, kitchens with many metallic surfaces can take an especially bold, bright color."

There are several trendy shades that look particularly striking with stainless, says Walch, whose association forecasts color trends.

"For a room with a lot of stainless steel, I'd suggest what we at the Color Association call Kabuki red — a deep, saturated red such as Benjamin Moore's Exotic Red (2086-10). That would look smashing with stainless steel."

If the thought of an entirely red kitchen makes you jumpy, Walch says, consider just one red wall. "You can either paint one wall red or do a red tile backsplash. Either way, it will give you a dynamic effect."

Slightly less dynamic but equally appealing is a deep, saturated yellow, says Walch. "There's no need to stick to the pale shades of yellow most often used in kitchens," she says.

"Instead, try Spanish bloom yellow, such as Benjamin Moore's Banana Yellow (2002-2). People like their kitchens to wake them up a bit in the morning. A deep, bright color helps make the kitchen more eye-opening."

You can make your own thank-you magnet quickly

By Sandi Genovese
Scripps Howard News Service

In this electronic age, it's not unusual to get invited to a party through the Internet with an e-vite. The RSPV will likely also be a link on which you click.

After the party, you could continue the pattern with a "thank-you" email, but I'm suggesting you break the cycle and go old-school with a handmade thank-you.

If time is an issue (it almost always is), then I have a solution that is quick and easy and a lot more personal than an email.

When I am going to attend a party or get together at someone's home, I make a thank-you magnet and bring it with me to the event.

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

Making a thank-you magnet takes less time than driving to the store to pick out a card.

Start with a box of self-adhesive, business-card-sized magnets from the office-supply store. They are available in a box of 50 and cost about 30 cents apiece, so price is not a concern.

Remove the protective backing and attach a scrap of paper to the magnet, embellish it to match the theme of the event, write out a quick thanks and sign it.

The trick is to do this before the party and take it to the event. Enjoy the evening.

And when you are getting ready to leave, just slap the magnet onto the fridge (or other metal surface in the kitchen).

Your hosts are not likely to discover it till the next day when they are cleaning up, and the sheer surprise of finding an unexpected thank-you note on the fridge is charming.

Making a thank-you magnet takes less time than driving to the store to pick out a card (forget about remembering to buy stamps), and the surprise value alone is worth the effort.

FROM THE COVER

MADISON
from 1C

Journalist Charles Kuralt, known for his "On the Road" segments for CBS, once had this to say about Madison: "For me the princess of the rivers (sorry, St. Louis; forgive me, Memphis) is unquestionably Madison, Indiana. To walk through Madison's leafy streets is to vow faithfulness to this regal lady forever."

It's a place to visit the farmers market on a Saturday morning or to stop for an ice cream cone during a leisurely afternoon stroll. It's a place to take a carriage ride and walk your dog (or for them to visit with tourists while you mind your downtown shop.)

It's a place for people who like to spend their leisure time shopping, dining, strolling, visiting a winery, touring a historic home or hiking nature trails, just to name a few possibilities.

Let's start with the history.

With more than 2,000 structures listed on the National Register of Historic Places, Madison (population 12,000) has Indiana's largest historic district.

Three sites — the Lanier Mansion State Historic Site, the Shrewsbury-Windel House and Eleutherian College — are designated as National Historic Landmarks. Madison has been awarded National Historic Landmark District designation, joining Savannah and Charleston as national treasures.

Madison's tourism office notes that included in the city's historic district and open to the public are a 19th-century horse and buggy doctor's office, a Greek Revival style town house, Madison's first mansion, an 1816 Federal style home believed to be Madison's first two-story tavern, the country's only restored 19th-century saddletree factory, an 1865 railroad station and the Lanier Mansion and formal garden.

Hikers visit an overlook on at trail at Clifty Falls State Park on the outskirts of Madison.

If you're in need of a little retail therapy, there are shops featuring locally made soap, handcrafted chocolate and confections, vintage musical instruments, lots of antiques and collectibles, an olive-oil and spice store that offers tastings, locally made tables and other furnishings, gemstones and rocks, yarn and needlework supplies, loads of handmade gift items, new and used books, fabrics, things for your pets, dolls and dollhouse miniatures, children's clothing and baby items, quilts, candles, fabrics and many other things.

For sustenance, there's upscale dining, Indiana's oldest tavern (Broadway Tavern), dining al fresco on local ingredients, cafes, coffee shops and Hinkle's Sandwich Shop, which has been cooking up its cheeseburgers and French fries in downtown Madison since 1933.

If wineries are your thing, there are three in Madison that are part of the Southeast Indiana Wine Trail.

A little history about winemaking along this stretch of the Ohio: More than 200 years ago, Swiss settlers just upriver near Vevay, Ind., began cultivating vineyards to produce wine and established itself as the birthplace of the American wine industry. That tradition has survived.

Madison's wineries include the Madison Vineyards Estate Winery located just outside of town and also offering a bed-and-breakfast; the Lanthier Winery, located right in town and offering an art gallery and a garden area; and the Thomas Family Winery, also in town with a pub-style tasting room located in an 1850s stable and carriage house and featuring traditional wines and old-world ciders.

And, finally, on the bluffs above Madison, you'll find Clifty Falls State Park, which offers opportunities for watching wildlife, picnic areas, a nature center with seasonal programming, a lodge for overnight stays, a dining room with notable fried chicken, a camping area and an Olympic-size swimming pool.

Hikers will find lots of trails from "easy" to "rugged" from which they can see deep gorges, sheer rock walls and waterfalls.

All sights to see, in a hometown-style place just a short piece up the road.

Anyone interested in pitting their real estate trading skills against other players should register for the event. There will also be a youth division (ages 9-16). Two 90-minute preliminary rounds of Monopoly will be played to determine the finalists. Then a final round will decide the tournament winner. Prizes will be awarded.

Blazing hot 2012 cooked local corn, dropping yields in half

CHUCK STINNETT
BUSINESS EDITOR

This Thursday, the community will show its appreciation to our farmers at the Henderson Chamber of Commerce's sure-to-be-sold-out Agriculture Award Breakfast.

But just how did our farmers' main two crops turn out last year?

The numbers are in and they confirm what has been apparent since late last summer: The blazing hot and dry summer of 2012 did everything but pop last year's corn crop.

Kentucky's corn crop was the worst in 25 years — worse even than during the miserable drought of 1988 — and resulted in yields not seen in a generation.

Since the early 1990s, it was all but a given that Kentucky farmers could coax an average of at least 100 bushels of corn per acre from the soil — usually more than 120 bushels and sometimes as high as the statewide record average of 165 bushels in 2009.

Individual fields around here can produce more than 200 bushels — and yields on excellent ground in an exceptional year can approach 300 bushels per acre.

Such yields seemed possible last year. Farmers need conditions dry enough in spring to allow them to plant their corn between, say, mid-April and early May, to maximize their production.

Last year, thanks to the warmest March ever recorded here, producers got off to a historic start. After just the first week of April last year, one-third of the state's corn crop was in the ground — and some producers were finished altogether. Simply normal weather with decent rain could result in a stunning crop.

Instead, the Henderson weather was hit by 70 days of 90-degree temperatures — nearly twice the normal number — and a withering 14 days of 100 degrees or hotter.

Equally horrible, a drought struck; from June 13 to Aug. 2, while corn plants baked in the heat wave, less than 1 inch of rain fell here. In early August, the USDA forecast that Kentucky's corn yield would average just 65 bushels per acre — the worst since 1983.

Updated figures released by the USDA a couple of weeks ago weren't much better: The state's corn yield now is calculated at 68.0 bushels per acre.

Local yields were dismal as well: 69.6 bushels per acre in Henderson

Businesses, governments see big benefits from Henderson recycling

Recycling is good business — and city and county officials in Henderson are hoping to make it even better.

"People are seeing that it's a way to keep things out of the landfill, which is going to help us down the road, but it also saves them on their waste (disposal) costs," said Freddie Rowland, operations manager for the city-county Henderson Recycling as well as the Tri-County Recycling Alliance. "They're paying less money, so that's more revenue for them."

Angela Sutherland, owner/franchisee of the Golden Corral restaurant at 1320 N. Green St., is certainly a convert. "We serve roughly 27,000 to 30,000 people a month," she said, which is equivalent to the population of Henderson.

Countless boxes are needed to ship in all that food, which translates into a lot of corrugated cardboard the restaurant needs to get rid of. Henderson Recycling, the entity created last year by the city and county governments, provides a white roll-off container (essentially a trailer without wheels) that is used both to collect the cardboard and truck it back to the recycling center.

"As a business owner, recycling is a very good thing to vdo as long as it's convenient and it's not going to cost more money," Sutherland said.

The cardboard collection service doesn't cost her anything "and it saves us money on our trash bill, because waste is charged by the weight. Cardboard absorbs a lot of water. We have a compactor, so when all that was going into the compactor, the cardboard would absorb whatever liquid was in there and it would become heavier, instead of draining through the drainage system we have."

So just how much money is she saving by recycling cardboard instead of landfilling it? "If I had to put a dollar amount to it, I would say anywhere from $1,500 to $2,000 a month," she said. "It's about the bottom line. Where we used to have once-a-week pick-up for our trash, we now can go every two weeks."

OTAKI, New Zealand — Sandra Vidulich is so excited about the leather boots she ordered through Amazon that she rips open the box in front of the postman and tries them on.

"I looove them," she declares, as the driveway at her tree-lined home in rural New Zealand briefly becomes a catwalk. "They're cool."

For now, a boom in Internet shopping is helping keep alive moribund postal services across the developed world.

But the core of their business — letters — is declining precipitously, and data from many countries indicate that parcels alone won't be enough to save them. The once-proud postal services that helped build modern society are scaling back operations, risking further declines.

The United Kingdom is preparing to wash its hands of mail deliveries entirely by selling the Royal Mail, which traces its roots back nearly 500 years to the reign of King Henry VIII.

The U.S. Postal Service sparked uproar last month when it announced plans to stop delivering letters on Saturdays. New Zealand is considering more drastic cuts: three days of deliveries per week instead of six.

Don't sacrifice quality to save money on electronics

COMPUTERS

There's no denying that indulging a love of electronics can get pricey. Here are a few tips to ensure that you don't overpay for technology.

■ Don't pay more for "high end" cables/connectors.

It may come as a surprise the part of your TV, home theater or computer purchase is typically most profitable for the electronics store is the additional cables you were sold on your way out the door.

When it comes to cables that transfer digital information, in almost all cases you aren't going to experience a noticeable improvement in image or sound quality if you pay more.

You may find a variance in the thickness of the cable casing and/or plastic surrounding the connector on higher-priced cables, which may make the cable somewhat more durable.

This can make a difference if you need your cable to span a large distance or go through a wall.

However, most people use their HDMI cables over a distance of less than six feet, behind their TV, where a lightweight cable will be perfectly suited.

It's not uncommon to find high-speed HDMI cables for $50 to $80 at a big-box retailer, yet online retailers such as monoprice.com offer cables that will give you the same video or sound quality for under $5.

USB cables are similarly overpriced. The same cable that you pay $25 for at a big-box retailer is available for less than $2 through some online sites.

■ Don't assume refurbished means broken.

Refurbished gadgets are typically sold at a sizeable discount over the new version. But many consumers hesitate, fearing the refurbished item had been returned to the manufacturer for repairs because it was damaged or defective.

While this is sometimes the case, there are other reasons why perfectly good gadgets end tagged as refurbished.

In some cases, the item (or even just the packaging itself) was scratched or damaged in transit. Units that retailers have made available as demo or display models are often sold as refurbished.

If a product has been purchased, opened and subsequently returned, it will be sold as refurbished even if the original owner never used it.

To save money and protect yourself when buying a refurbished product, look for one labeled "factory recertified," and be sure it carries a warranty of at least 90 days.

You can often find even better deals on refurbished items sold through third-party retailers, but exercise caution.

If the item was damaged and repaired, it's important that you have a reputable company that will stand behind it while you determine that it's working properly.

■ Don't invest in the "wrong" things when buying a new desktop PC.

Historically, the processor made a noticeable difference in system performance, even to basic users, so it made sense to pay more to upgrade from a 1.3 GHz processor to a 1.8 GHz processor.

These days, processors process data so quickly that most of us wouldn't notice a difference between an Intel Core i5 and an Intel Core i7, though the upgrade costs $200 to $300 more.

Instead, spend your money on RAM (aim for 8GB with a new PC) or upgrade from a standard hard drive to a solid-state drive.

Both will lead to a more noticeable speed increase and won't be as costly as upgrading the processor.

Email, voicemail, text — no response. What gives?

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Technology is supposed to make us easier to reach, and often does. But the same modes of communication that have hooked us on the instant reply also can leave us feeling forgotten.

We send an email, a text or an instant chat message. We wait — and nothing happens. Or we make a phone call. Leave a voicemail message. Wait. Again, nothing.

We tend to assume it's a snub, and sometimes it is.

Erica Swallow, a 26-year-old New Yorker, says she's heard a former boyfriend brag about how many text messages he never reads. "Who does that?" she asks, exasperatedly.

These days, though, no response can mean a lot of things. Maybe some people don't see messages because they prefer email and you like Twitter. Maybe we're just plain overwhelmed, and can't keep up with the constant barrage of communication.

Whatever the reason, it's causing a lot of frustration. A recent survey by the Pew Internet & American Life Project found that 39 percent of cellphone owners say people they know complain because they don't respond promptly to phone calls or text messages. A third of cell owners also have been told they don't check their phones frequently enough.

It happens in love. It happens in business.

"Tell me to go to hell, but just tell me something! I'm getting lonely over here." That's what Cherie Kerr, a public relations executive in Santa Ana, Calif., jokes she's considered putting after her email signature.

It happens in families.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mahrinah von Schlegel, managing director of Cibola, an incubator for tech entrepreneurs that will open this spring, checks a social networking site in Chicago recently, as her cellphone sits nearby.

Last year, Terri Barr, a woman on Long Island, N.Y., with grown children, sent her son a birthday present — a $350 gift certificate for "a wonderful kayaking trip for six, lunch, wine, equipment," she says.

She sent him an email with the details, but he didn't respond. She says she then telephoned and texted him to tell him it was a present. He eventually sent a one-line email, she says, telling her he was too swamped to open her email gift right then.

Instant communication "can be wonderful — but also terrible," says Barr, who shared the story more as a lament of modern communication than a reprimand of her son, whose busy work life, she acknowledged, often takes him overseas.

So this year, she sent him a birthday gift by snail-mail in a box. "He actually opened it," she says, and they've been talking more frequently since then.

Many other people, though, sit waiting for responses that never come.

"That's where the frustration lies — it's in the ambiguity," says Susannah Stern, a professor of communication studies at San Diego State University.

Though we often assume the worst, experts say we shouldn't.

Frequently, they say, people simply — and unknowingly — choose the wrong way to contact someone.

"I admit to having often been lax with checking my work number voicemail, which has led to me not responding to people waiting for my reply," says Janet Sternberg, an assistant professor of communication and media studies at Fordham University.

She's also had technical glitches. For instance: thinking she'd sent a text message to someone overseas and then, when he didn't respond, realizing she had his international number programmed incorrectly in her phone.

"The sheer management of all these devices and channels is exhausting and sometimes daunting, leaving less and less time for actual communication," Sternberg says. "We connect more but communicate less, in many ways."

That's why many people say they have no choice but to prioritize — and to respond only to the most urgent messages.

That describes Mahrinah von Schlegel, who's working to launch a Chicago-based "incubator" that will offer shared office space and other resources for fledgling tech entrepreneurs.

"People get angry when not answered and send multiple messages," says von Schlegel, the 30-year-old managing director of the firm, known as Cibola. She says missed communication has caused her to lose some business deals. Often, it's when people try to contact her by Facebook or direct message on Twitter and she doesn't see the messages for days. Email, she says, is her preferred mode of communication.

But even then, she says, there are only so many hours in the day: "I still need time to eat and sleep and shower."

As she sees it, getting no response — even when she's the one unsuccessfully trying to contact someone — is just part of life in a high-tech world. A lot of young people say that, so they've become accustomed to having to try again, or try a different mode of communication if something is truly urgent.

"I think there's this understanding because we've grown up being bombarded by communication," says Mike Gnitecki, a 28-year-old special education teacher in Longview, Texas.

So he's willing to try "multiple points of contact" when trying to reach his students' parents — because, if he wants a response, "that's just how it is."

David Gillman, a 25-year-old Chicagoan, also opts for brevity and efficiency by sending mass texts to several friends at once to save time.

He only expects those who have time or inclination to respond, and doesn't take it personally if they don't.

It gets trickier, he says, with people from older generations, including his parents, because they like to leave him voicemails, which he doesn't like to take time to check.

"I need to get better about that," he concedes.

Those types of missed communications — and a lack of response — can cause "turbulence" in a relationship, says Dan Faltesek, an assistant professor of social media at Oregon State University. But, he adds, that's not necessarily a bad thing.

"It can be a little awkward, but you should talk to people about how you like to talk," Faltesek says. "Everyone will be happier when they say what the rules are."

And it'll go even more smoothly, he says, when people are willing to step outside their own favorite mode of communication to those preferred by the person they're contacting.

"Use the reverse golden rule," Faltesek advises. "Treat others the way THEY like to be treated."

An example: Gnitecki, the teacher in Texas, is considering sending a survey home to ask parents how they'd like to be contacted.

Tech and communication experts agree that choosing a primary means of communication, and letting it be known, is one way to improve communication.

Rebecca Otis, content and social media manager at Digital Third Coast, an Internet marketing firm in Chicago, also recommends getting rid of email and social media accounts you don't check regularly. And text messaging, she says, should be reserved for communication that requires a more urgent reply.

Finding ways to prioritize, and receive, the most important messages also helps.

San Francisco-based AwayFind Inc. is among companies that have developed applications that help filter email — in this instance, alerting users to important emails on their mobile devices.

In the end, we can't possibly respond to everything, says Jared Goralnick, the company's founder and CEO, who's also part of a nonprofit group called the Information Overload Research Group, which looks for ways to deal with out-of-control communication.

As he sees it, it's good to be responsive, "but not to set an expectation that you'll be available for everything."

"That's just not sustainable," he says.

Coffee business perking up for specialty roasters

By Teresa F. Lindeman
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

A few months ago, a contingent of Japanese coffee professionals looking for insights into the specialty coffee business ended up near Pittsburgh's main airport in an industrial building where burlap bags packed with green coffee beans from countries around the world are piled up, ready for roasting.

In Japan, it's been a challenge to convince customers that some coffees are worth more than others, with a slowing economy hitting the industry hard.

"It's all price-based competition," said Bill Swoope Jr., co-owner of Coffee Tree Roasters shops and Iron Star Roasting Co. in Pittsburgh.

Meanwhile, in the U.S., specialty coffees rose from about 37 percent of coffee cups in 2011 to 46 percent in 2012, according to the National Coffee Association in New York. Many Americans cut back on their gourmet coffee fix during the economic downturn, but others aren't willing to give up the small luxury, according to a recent survey by BIGinsight for Stores magazine.

Proof that there's continuing demand for better coffee: fast-food operator Burger King recently announced it had overhauled its coffee offerings, with the new brews blended by Seattle's Best Coffee.

Swoope credits industry powerhouse Starbucks with helping show Americans the differences in coffee made from freshly roasted beans rather than from mass-packaged grounds sold in jars and cans.

Consumers who know about the differences in coffee from, say, Rwanda and Costa Rica, and think about how those beans should be roasted might be willing to walk a little further — and pay a little more — to get their daily fix.

The Japanese visitors are looking to achieve solid results as well. Hidetaka Hayashi, president of Hayashi Coffee Institute in Tokyo, was quoted in the Specialty Coffee Association of America's news outlet in January as saying one of the goals of the trip was to "study why U.S. specialty coffee roasters can expand their sales and enjoy reasonable profit" in a challenging economic climate.

Hayashi is a board member for the Cup of Excellence international competitive program run by the Alliance for Coffee Excellence in Missoula, Mont., and Swoope is on the alliance's advisory panel.

Other stops on the recent tour of Japanese professionals included Green Mountain Coffee Roasters in Vermont and Counter Culture Coffee in North Carolina. The Specialty Coffee Association, in Long Beach, Calif., helped organize the trip.

Bill Swoope Jr., co-owner of Coffee Tree Roasters, checks on roasting beans at the company's facility in West Mifflin, Pa.

Being able to offer something different helps separate specialty coffees from mass market versions. Swoope thinks a sun-dried variety from the Costa Rican estate La Minita that he carries is only sold by four roasters in the world. He buys half of the supply.

Soil, weather and other factors all affect the flavors of beans. Swoope has traveled to Costa Rica, Indonesia and Rwanda to find good varieties. Next year he hopes to go to Papua, New Guinea.

Every step along the line from the farm to the customer can affect the taste of the coffee. Beans can be "washed" or "semi-washed" or "dry processed," all of which has to do with how they are separated from their fruit and sorted.

In the Coffee Tree Roasters warehouse, roasting machines raise the temperature of the beans, while workers check color and listen for the series of cracks that come as moisture escapes.

At different points, beans are put through cuppings, the name for an analysis process. The elaborate system, which resembles a wine tasting, involves checking the aromas of roasted beans that are ground. Hot water is added. After a set period of time, taste testings begin.

Probably the best place to drink a cup of coffee is on the farm where the beans were grown. "That coffee's never going to taste any better than what it is on the tree," Swope said.

Car tires highly unlikely to explode even if grossly overinflated

CLICK AND CLACK

Dear Tom and Ray: Yesterday I went out to put air in my tires, and I had the same problem I always do — I'm very afraid that the tire will explode while I'm filling it, probably ripping the skin off my face.

I end up filling the tire only one or two PSI at a time while looking away, then rechecking the pressure, and so on.

Can you give me any advice? Has a tire ever exploded on you? Do you still have your faces? Thanks.

— Ashley

Tom: Unfortunately, for those living near us, we DO still have our faces.

Ray: You have tireophobia, Ashley. But you can stop worrying. We've never seen it happen in all the years we've been fixing cars.

Tom: It's virtually impossible to explode a tire while filling it up with air. Even though your tire is designed to run on, say, 30-35 pounds of pressure per square inch (psi), it would take something like 250 psi to cause the rubber to break apart.

Ray: The air compressors in gas stations and tire shops don't produce anywhere near that much air pressure.

So even if you grossly overinflated your tire, it wouldn't explode.

Tom: We occasionally hear about a tire exploding, but it's almost always a truck tire. And it's usually what we think of as a "blow out," when the tire is on the road, traveling at high speed and generating a lot of heat.

Ray: Or it's while the truck tire is being mounted, and the bead fails. But even those instances are rare.

Tom: So you can stop worrying, Ashley; it's not going to happen. But we know that phobias are not entirely rational.

So if it really ruins your day to inflate a tire, find a full-service gas station or a friendly repair shop, and tip some guy to do it for you.

Find some guy like my brother, who'll be more than happy to risk his face for a couple of bucks. After all, how much worse could it get?

Dear Tom and Ray: My fiancee and I were discussing our wedding plans the other day, and a question came up. We'll be driving away in my VW convertible (there was no discussion on that).

However, her maid of honor insists on decorating it. I told my fiancee no. I don't want my car dressed up like a clown car.

I hate those people who put antlers and a red ball on the hood during the holidays, thinking it's cute.

I compromised and said that a magnet on the back that simply states "Just Married" would be fine.

But I'm afraid I'm going to walk out and there will be stuff all over my beautiful car.

What do you think?

Am I crazy? I will be using everything you say in our court of love law. So, please side with me ... but be unbiased.* (*wink)

— Ray

Tom: Making decisions in a marriage is an art, Ray.

Ray: Which makes my brother, what? Jackson Pollock!

Tom: Right. I've spilled a lot of paint throughout the years. So trust me on this stuff.

Ray: We're sympathetic to you, Ray. As are all of our male readers who live in houses with pink kitchens and bathrooms.

Tom: But "getting married" is really the first act of "being married." Planning a wedding and dealing with increasingly crazed relatives and friends as the date gets closer forces you to work together as a couple.

Ray: In order to succeed as a couple, you have to learn to make decisions that are acceptable to both of you. If the way you settle arguments is that one of you wins and the other one loses, it's going to be a short marriage.

Tom: In which case you might as well insist on having your way, Ray!

Ray: More top-notch marital advice from my brother.

Tom: Actually, here's where I noticed a problem, Ray: You say that you'll be driving away in your VW convertible, and that there was no discussion on that.

Well, maybe there should have been discussion on that. Just as there should be discussion on anything you both feel strongly about.

Ray: When you disagree, one thing you each want to assess is the relative importance of the given issue.

It may be that she doesn't really care what car you drive away in, so if taking the VW is important to you, she's fine with that.

But it may be that decorating the car and fully emasculating you in full public view of your nearest and dearest IS important to her. In which case, you may need to give her that.

Tom: Or the car decoration might not be very important to her, so she'll agree to the magnetized sign, but you'll agree to something else that's more important to her.

Ray: Like agreeing that your frat brother Zeke will be chained to the floor in the coat closet until the ceremony and reception both are over and your honeymoon flight is at 28,000 feet.

Tom: So when you don't agree on something, start by asking, "How important is this to you, on a scale of one to 10?" When there's stuff that she rates a nine or 10 and you rate a two or three, do it her way. And vice versa.

Ray: And just a warning, Ray: If you rate everything a 10, you'll be joining my brother very shortly in the marriage-of-the-month-club. Congratulations, you two!

"Easter Egg" details on the new Jeep Wrangler include a small decal of the front grill on the inside of the windshield. Look closely at the Jeep Wrangler and you'll see several small tributes to the Willys model that started it all 60-plus years ago.

On the windshield, on the front seat passenger's forward grab bar, and on each of the four rims are little styling cues that harken back to the Jeep's heritage as a do-all troop hauler in World War II.

Some are more prominent than others, but collectively, Chrysler's designers call them "Easter eggs" — little designs left behind to be found later.

"It's something that started three or four years ago and it's really taken off. Now I have to almost control it," said Ralph Gilles, Chrysler's vice president for product design. "They can get out of hand. But (designers) are so proud of what they work on, they really are. It's almost like actively trying to leave a legacy for the next generation."

At Chrysler, Easter eggs aren't confined to the Wrangler, though the model has several, including a Jeep grille logo above the rear-view mirror and a silhouette of a Jeep climbing a rocky hillside in the passenger corner of the windshield. The grab bar is embossed with "Jeep" and "Since 1941."

The newest comes on the rims of all 2013-model year Saharas and Rubicons with a small but unmistakable Willys Jeep silhouette.

Gilles said the silhouette marks the 10th anniversary of the Wrangler Rubicon, a more rugged and trail-ready version of the Wrangler.

The wheel of a Jeep Wrangler Unlimited Sahara salutes the company's past with a small decal in on the lower left portion of the wheel at the North American International Auto Show in Detroit. The same silhouette is also hidden away in the headlamp assembly of the 2014 Jeep Grand Cherokee.

"The Wrangler is always going to be the original," Gilles said in an interview last month at the North American International Auto Show in Detroit. "The Willys Jeep is kind of the godfather of the brand."

Small semi-hidden design elements have shown up on other cars over the years. Since the 1990s, Chevrolet Corvettes have had small icons of a baseball bat, hot dog, apple pie, and Chevrolet bowtie logo stamped into metal that would normally be covered with carpet near the rear speakers, recalling the lyrics from a classic 1974 Chevrolet ad.

"Easter egg" details on the new Jeep Wrangler include a small decal of the front grill on the inside of the windshield.

The practice is far from exclusive to the auto industry, however.

"The idea of creating these moments of discovery in a design that reinforced a purchase, that's very common in design. Apple excels at it," said Dan Cuffaro, chairman of the industrial design department at the Cleveland Institute of Art.

Cuffaro said including small details consumers perhaps weren't aware of at the time of purchase allows them to discover them later as a sort of reward for their purchase. An example he gave was one of the cell phones with changeable faceplates. A smiley face was etched into the metal underneath the cover.

"It was something the average person might never come across," he said. "They have to change their faceplate and there's this complex piece of electronics with a little smiley face. It's just alleviating the intimidation ... the smiley face takes the edge off the experience."

It's also common in video games and computer programs, where inputting a certain code unlocks a hidden feature. Google often writes tricks into its search engine — try searching for "tilt."

Water-saving toilet can save average of $100 per year

By James Dulley
Syndicated columnist

Dear Jim: Our old master bathroom toilet does not flush well and we are thinking about adding a first-floor half bath. What are the best types of toilets to get for each room and which ones save the most water?

— Connie H.

Dear Connie: You can probably repair your old toilet yourself so it works better, but it would be better to just install a new water-saving model.

Flushing toilets typically accounts for 30 percent of the water usage for a family, making it, by far, the greatest single water usage appliance.

Depending upon how old your master bathroom toilet is, it may use either 3.5 or 5.0 gpf (gallons of water per flush). The average family can save up to $100 per year in water costs by installing water-saving toilets. I recently replaced an old toilet with a 1.6 gpf toilet which cost less than $60 at Home Depot. This can provide a payback in less than one year.

The federal standard for new toilets is a maximum of 1.6 gpf. Many of the new toilets now use only 1.28 gpf and some are as low as 1.1 gpf.

PHOTO FURNISHED

This macerating toilet is located in a basement or on a slab. Notice the pump unit located behind the toilet and the vertical pipe which carries the wastes to a drain above.

With the new internal water flow designs, they flush effectively with these smaller amounts of water. There are techniques and kits to reduce water usage for old toilets, but they sometimes require double-flushes for solid wastes.

A standard gravity-type 1.28- or 1.6-gpf toilet would be your best choice for your master bathroom. They flush effectively and are reasonably quiet. Two-piece (tank and bowl) models are usually less expensive than more stylish one-piece models. They are also easier to handle in two pieces. The only drawback is the gap between the two pieces is harder to keep clean.

There are dual-flush gravity models available which use either 1.1- or 1.6-gpf for liquids or solids respectively. On some, you push the handle up or down depending upon the flush volume needed. On others, there is a dual push button located on top of the tank. Both are equally effective.

For your new first-floor half-bathroom, consider installing a pressure-assist model. The incoming water compresses air in an internal tank. This compressed air creates a forceful, rapid flush. These are common in a public restroom.

The flush is louder than with a gravity model which should not be a problem on the first floor.

If you have several men in your family, consider installing a small wall-mounted urinal in the new h alf-bathroom. It uses less than 1.0 gpf and some collapse into the wall and are hidden when not used.

If your house is built on a slab or when putting a toilet in a basement, it can be difficult to install the drain. In this case, use a macerating toilet which grinds up the wastes and pumps them upward to an existing drain. These toilets are expensive but less costly than installing a new drain.

The following companies offer water-saving toilets: American Standard, (800) 442-1902, www.americanstandard-us.com; Briggs Plumbing, (800) 888-4458, www.briggsplumbing.com; Kohler, (800) 456-4537, www.kohler.com; and Saniflo, (800) 571-8191, www.saniflo.com; and Toto, (888) 295-8134, www.totousa.com.

Dear Jim: I thought about installing a fiberglass insulation kit on my garage door. It has a one-half horsepower opener and the door has torsion springs. Will an insulation kit be too heavy for the opener?

— Steve W.

Dear Steve: People often think the opener motor has to be powerful enough to lift the garage door. Actually, the torsion counterbalance springs should almost support the total weight of the door. The motor just moves it up and down.

An insulation kit with fiberglass batts or panels is not very heavy, so it should not be a problem. The torsion springs may have to be cranked just a little tighter, but mostly likely not.

Investing in rental properties can be tricky endeavor

■ But following tips will give you edge in booming business

By Alex Veiga
Associated Press

Low mortgage rates have made buying a home more affordable and turned rentals into an attractive option for investors.

Throughout the downturn in the housing market, average investors, sometimes pooling their money, have bought foreclosures at a sharp discount and turned them into rentals. Many homeowners also have purchased a second home and rented out their first property.

Although the housing market is showing signs of recovery, demand for rental housing is expected to remain strong. The national unemployment rate remains high at 7.9 percent, banks are still working through a backlog of foreclosures and tight lending requirements prevent many renters from becoming homeowners.

And the Fed has said it will keep its short-term interest rate, the federal funds rate, at a record low until U.S. unemployment falls below 6.5 percent, something many economists don't expect to happen until late 2015 at the earliest.

"In this market, at this point, it's a sweet spot," says Chris Princis, a senior executive at financial advisory firm Brook-Hollow Financial and owner of two rental properties in Chicago. "You're getting the market where it's just starting to rebound, but still at the bottom, with what's looking to be a great recovery."

Here are six tips on becoming a landlord or investor in rental property:

1. Understand what it means to be a landlord.

Residential real estate generally provides three possible ways to get a return on your investment: when it's sold, assuming it has grown in value, by collecting rent and through tax savings, such as the mortgage interest deduction.

So, if you elect to buy a property for the long-term investment potential, the goal should be to ensure that the rental income covers the cost of your mortgage and monthly maintenance costs.

If you buy a foreclosed home, you'll have to factor in the cost of repairs to ready the home for rent. And if you have a mortgage on the property, you'll need to be prepared to cover the costs for however long it takes to find a tenant.

2. Buy in an area with a history of strong rental demand.

Neighborhoods near universities are a good option. For homes in residential areas, proximity to schools can be a good draw for families.

Condominiums and similar properties in communities with a homeowners' association can be a great option because the association arranges for upkeep on the property.

But check the fine print on your mortgage and homeowners' association rules to make sure turning your property into a rental isn't forbidden.

If you're going to buy a foreclosure, be prepared to compete with other investors, many of them paying in cash. And because many require upgrades and repairs, expect that it will take longer until you'll be generating rental income.

Websites like Zillow.com and Trulia.com list foreclosures, as well as rentals in a given area.

3. Consider using a management firm.

Determine whether you want to select the tenant and handle property issues or hire a company to do it. If you take on the responsibility, you are obliged to fix any problems (leaky faucets, broken furnace, etc.) or find professionals to do it.

"Are you prepared to do all of this on your weekends or evenings or get calls while you're at work because a pipe burst and it's flooding?" asks Jim Warren, chief marketing officer for property management company FirstService Residential Realty. "What's that threshold worth to you?"

Property management firms can charge a percentage of the rent, sometimes 10 percent or more.

4. Do the math.

Although prevailing rental prices will go a long way toward determining what you can charge, getting the best return on your investment starts with making sure you're going to get enough rent to, ideally, cover expenses and costs.

Princis' formula is charging 15 percent above monthly mortgage and maintenance costs. So if those costs add up to $1,000, he'll look to charge $1,150.

Of course, flexibility might be called for if you're unable to get a tenant in for months and months.

5. Screen tenants thoroughly.

Once your rental starts drawing inquiries, it pays off to screen prospective tenants by asking for previous landlord references and running a credit and a criminal records check.

Experts also recommend asking for a deposit equal to one month's rent, plus extra if the tenant has pets. That will help cover any damage to the property and protect you if a tenant moves without paying rent.

6. Get familiar with landlord laws.

As a neophyte landlord, it's important to know your exact responsibilities under the law.

Two good resources for rental rules are the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's website (www.hud.gov), and The Landlord Protection Agency (www.thelpa.com), which includes state-specific rental guidelines and standardized forms for rental agreements.

FROM THE COVER

STINNETT
from 1D

— just half of the previous year's yield — along with 75.6 bushels in Union County and 59.5 bushels in Webster County.

McLean County was the recipient of a couple of showers that missed much of the region, and yields there topped 106 bushels. But down in the Purchase area of the state, conditions were even drier than here and yields were even more appalling: 49.4 bushels per acre in Graves County, 36.3 bushels in Calloway County, 29.2 bushels in Livingston County.

It's a year farmers will tell their kids about in years to come.

Remarkably, Union County, which led the state in corn production in 2011 with 12.1 million bushels, remained the No. 1 county last year with just 7.05 million bushels. Daviess County ranked No. 2 with 6.6 million bushels while Henderson County ranked third with 6.1 million bushels. Webster County produced 2.7 million bushels.

Fortunately, some desperately needed rains fell in August and early September, helping salvage late-planted soybeans in particular. Statewide, 2012 bean yields averaged 40.0 bushels per acre, up from the 39.0 bushels in 2011.

Christian County, with average yields of 43.8 bushels per acre, ranked No. 1 in soybean production in Kentucky with more than 3.1 million bushels, followed by Daviess County (3.0 million bushels, yielding 43.0 bushels per acre), Logan County (2.95 million bushels, 45.5 bushels per acre) and Henderson County (2.75 million bushels, 39.6 bushels per acre).

Union County's soybean crop totaled 2.1 million bushels (44.5 per acre) while Webster County produced 1.5 million bushels (41.8 per acre).

If there is any silver lining in this playbook, it's that commodity prices remain high. Nobody wants a bad corn crop for our farmers — especially not with soaring land (and rent) prices and high diesel and fertilizer costs. But $7-per-bushel corn and $14.50 soybeans are a big help.

The 2012 crop is still being marketed, so the USDA won't have a calculation for the value of last year's crops for another six months or more. Certainly it won't match Henderson County's record $91.6 million in 2011 crop receipts.

The bigger question is: What will this year's weather bring?

We know this much: After a nice, wet winter, the drought here is broken ... for now.

RECYCLE
from 1D

DARRIN PHEGLEY / THE GLEANER

Inmate Gregory Kinney, center, is assisted by another inmate, left, while strapping down a cardboard bale at the Recycle Center Friday morning.

Music at 119 N. Main St., said his business also generates a lot of cardboard, but isn't quite in the same situation. "Our trash pickup bill is pretty fixed," he said. "Whether we have three or four (containers) out there I don't think it changes that much.

"We probably wouldn't do it if it was just about money, because it takes a little more time to recycle. But it adds value to the community for us to be a responsible community partner." He noted his neighboring businesses also contribute cardboard to the bin.

Jon Floyd, owner of D&M Market at 702 N. Green St., occupies the middle ground: He's saving money, although not nearly to the extent Sutherland is, but he's happy to be lending a hand to his community.

"I used to have to pay the trash people $10 a week to haul it off," Floyd said. "It saves me $40 a month and makes the county even more than that. It should keep everybody in the county from having to pay more taxes."

Furthermore, he said, the recycling containers provided are convenient: "You don't have to think about it. They come every few days and check them."

He conceded that it would probably make more economic sense to buy a baler and sell the corrugated cardboard himself, but he's not anxious to make that hefty an investment. "They're hauling off what we would have to have big money to deal with."

What he likes best about the program is that the manpower comes mostly from inmates at the Henderson County Detention Center. "Everybody in the world ought to be happy with it if the inmates are doing it and if it's paying for itself."

Actually, the city-county recycling program is not yet paying for itself, but it's moving in that direction. Henderson Recycling was created by the city and county governments in mid-2012.

Rowland runs both that and the Tri-County Recycling Alliance, which with a $900,000 grant is currently in the process of erecting a 18,000-square-foot processing center at 398 Sam Ball Way, next to the county Road Garage, which will handle not only recycled materials from all of Henderson County, but also from Union and Webster counties. The new center will be run by Henderson Recycling.

The idea behind Henderson Recycling is for it to be the endpoint for all recycled materials collected in the community, as well as for those collected in Union and Webster counties — and perhaps other counties as well. That will be done by dumping a mix of recycled materials on a conveyor and having jail inmates sort it into the respective piles.

Once the materials have been sorted and baled by inmates, they will be hauled to market in bulk, timing the sales so Henderson Recycling can get the best possible prices. The idea is for the program to eventually be self-supporting — or even turn a profit.

Henderson Recycling also plans to process and market the materials collected in Union and Webster counties, taking a cut of the proceeds for providing that service. Other communities could also be provided the same service.

By the third year of its existence, according to long-term budgets, Henderson Recycling is projected to be annually costing city and county governments only $21,058 apiece.

That's a far cry from the $189,684 the city of Henderson is currently paying Allied Waste Services of Evansville annually to provide curbside recycling. City residential trash customers are currently paying an extra $1 per month on their bills to help cover the costs of curbside recycling.

Materials collected through curbside recycling currently are retained by Allied Waste, but Mayor Steve Austin is convinced they must go to Henderson Recycling if the new facility is to be successful.

"We've got to have the product now that we're going to do our own processing and selling that product," Austin said.

Not only does Henderson Recycling need to have control of the materials collected, it must also boost participation rates. "We need to get our usage up over 50 percent. Right now we're down to 30 percent or maybe under 30 percent."

Curbside recycling needs to be invigorated "or we're not going to have materials to feed that operation," he said. Henderson Recycling needs to have that question resolved by mid-summer "or we're not going to have a stream of recycling to run all the equipment out there."

"I'd like to know whether we can do it for less than what a vendor can do it for," said city Commissioner Robby Mills. "If a vendor can do it cheaper, then obviously that's the way to go about it."

Assistant City Manager William "Buzzy" Newman said one of the problems in figuring out the answer to that question is determining the value of the recycled materials. "Right now we don't know that number. There's no way of knowing it" because markets fluctuate and there's no way to determine what the volumes will be.

Newman estimated it would cost roughly $135,000 a year for labor, equipment, fuel and supplies for Henderson Recycling to do its own curbside recycling pickup.

Consequently, Henderson Recycling is currently in the process of seeking proposals from firms interested in collecting curbside recycling but willing to allow Henderson Recycling to keep the results of those collections.

And it's also looking at expanding the curbside program.

"We've identified seven major subdivisions (outside the city limits) that we would want included and would be economically feasible to include in curbside pickup," Newman said.

Those subdivisions include Country Club, Thornridge, Pleasantview, Broadview, Holloway Hills, Bent Creek and Viking Hills. "We're going to target those areas to see what the potential participation could be."

But the problem, he added, is "how do you bill those customers? Right now they're on private trash pickup."

Newman welcomed suggestions from the public on how the service could be improved.

Another major problem facing the curbside collection effort — if Henderson Recycling decides to take over collection — is paying for the thousands of receptacles needed. The ubiquitous blue boxes used by Allied Waste would have to go, local officials say, because they're too small and too unwieldy — not user-friendly, in other words.

Newman estimated there are roughly 10,200 households in the city, although only about 3,000 are currently participating in curbside recycling, and that new recycling containers would cost about $40 each.

That may sound a little pricey, but Henderson Recycling envisions using large rolling garbage cans — probably either 35 or 65 gallons in size — which would make it much easier for residents to recycle and, hopefully, increase participation.

Austin said about 3,500 containers are needed initially and probably another 3,000 over the next few years. At $40 a whack, that adds up to a considerable chunk of change — about $260,000.

Henderson Recycling already has 96-gallon containers — 150 of them — scattered across the community at nearly 60 locations. Well over half of them are at local businesses. And that's not counting the white roll-offs, which are like small trailers. There are 85 of those, of which 63 are located at businesses.

Since mid-2011, things have really picked up at the local recycling center, and the roll-off containers have provided a big boost. The first quarter of fiscal year 2011-12 (June through August 2011) saw less than 40 tons of materials recycled. Every quarter since then has seen that number about tripled. Totals recycled in 2011-12 were nearly 419 tons, and totals for the last half of 2012 were more than 258 tons.

"That may not seem like a lot to some people" but it represents a respectable amount of work done "by seven or eight jail inmates and two supervisors," said recycling operations manager Rowland, who has headed the operation for more than a year.

The program would not be possible without the inmate labor, he said. "We could recycle without inmate labor, but not in any volume to make to worthwhile. No way.

"We've got (containers) everywhere. We've got downtown businesses, two stables that are using them, some of the general stores like at Niagara, Smith Mills and Cairo all have one.

"We have people calling daily to let us know their container is filled and ready for us to come and pick it up. Some people want us to do it on a weekly basis. There's no way we can do it on a weekly basis. It can't be done."

He noted he has two trucks to collect 232 containers. "Each one would have to average over eight containers a day. We just can't do it. Even if we could, right now, we don't have a place to put it."

But Rowland pointed out there is tremendous potential for growth in the operation. Banks would like to participate more, as well as law firms, but the center doesn't yet have a paper shredder that makes it feasible; sensitive documents must be shredded before those types of businesses would feel comfortable recycling their office paper.

Rowland said he expects an adequate shredder would cost at least $15,000. He's anxious to get one because white office paper commands a premium price in recycling terms. "Until then, we just can't do it for them. That's unfortunate."

Increased public awareness is one of the main reasons for increases in volume, as well as the potential for growth, Rowland said. "Knowledge. Getting people to understand what's going on."

Susan Sauls, the county's recycling education and outreach specialist, said she has certainly seen a change in attitudes, particularly when it comes to young schoolchildren. "It's interesting to see how much those kids know about recycling and what they're supposed to do."

But she said she's seen raised consciousness in the business community about the advantages of recycling. For instance, she said, local lodging establishments have made tremendous strides.

"Almost all of them are recycling the items collected from the guest rooms as well as the items they generate from their daily operations," Sauls said. "The hotel employees have changed their procedures quite a bit in some of the locations. The entire effort with the hotels has been quite a success."

It's important, Sauls said, for business owners to realize that there will probably be some re-education that has to occur with employees when a recycling program is started.

"It's a mindset. Just like at home. You have to do something with this thing in your hand. You can either put it in the trash, like you've always done, or put it in another container."

Sutherland at the Golden Corral restaurant ran into the same phenomenon when cardboard recycling began there.

"Actually, it was a pain in the beginning," Sutherland said, because long-term staff members had to break old habits and adopt new ones. "Now, everyone has pretty much learned to break down the boxes as they go."

Employees used to just toss boxes in the compactor "and the compactor would smash them and you wouldn't have to worry about it. Now they have to break down every box ... otherwise they take up too much room. It's not hard. It doesn't take any extra time. It's just a learning curve."

County Judge-executive Hugh McCormick said other people are going to have to take that little bit of extra effort to make sure local recycling efforts become as successful as they have the potential to be.

"It has really worked and we feel it is a benefit," he said. "We feel that it touches everybody: businesses, homes, industries. We're growing monthly. The center continues to expand. The recycling containers we have sitting at businesses are helping them in that maybe they don't have to have as big of container for their trash.

But he said much remains to be done. "It's not even up running full steam yet.

"We hope to provide more services to the people as we grow. But it's also helping future generations. Every ton that we keep out of the landfill is just another $40 or so that we save the taxpayers of this community. The bottom line is that it's going to be a savings for our community. As we get this building done, we hope to be a full-service recycling center."

Mayor Austin made the same point that increasing participation can help avoid landfill costs: "We hope in the long run we're going to get enough product in to offset our costs," he said, but there are also savings in avoiding landfill costs.

"It's going to work out really good. It really is. I think we can reduce our landfill costs, pay our bills and spend less in the future than what we're spending today."

MAIL
from 1D

It's only in the past few years that postal services have truly felt the pinch of the Internet. Revenues at the USPS, which delivers about 40 percent of the world's mail, peaked in 2007 at $75 billion.

But the decline since then has been rapid. USPS revenue in 2012 fell to $65 billion, and its losses were $15.9 billion. It handled 160 billion pieces of mail that year, down from 212 billion in 2007. And it had slashed its work force by 156,000, or 23 percent.

Elsewhere, the news is just as grim. La Poste in France estimates that by 2015, it will be delivering 30 percent fewer letters than it did in 2008. Japan last year delivered 13 percent fewer letters than it did four years earlier. In Denmark, the postal service said letter volumes dropped 12 percent in a single year.

The Universal Postal Union, which reports to the United Nations, estimates that letter volumes worldwide dropped by nearly 4 percent in 2011 and at an even faster clip in developed nations. Developed countries closed 5 percent of their post offices in 2011 alone.

And while Internet shopping continues to grow, postal services that once profited from their monopoly on letters find themselves competing for parcels against private companies like FedEx.

U.S. Postmaster General Patrick Donahoe, in an interview with The Associated Press, said he doesn't believe the service can ever regain the revenue from packages it has lost from letters. He said axing Saturday mail deliveries, while keeping six-day-a-week package deliveries, will save the service about $2 billion a year.

Donahoe said he thinks ending Saturday letter deliveries will keep the USPS a solid proposition for years to come.

"People still go to their mailbox every day and they wait for their mail to come," he said. "It's part of American life."

And it has been since the beginning. The postal service's role was defined in the Constitution, and Benjamin Franklin was the first postmaster general. The short-lived Pony Express achieved an enduring place in American folklore. Even the modern system of highways and airline travel grew from pioneering routes developed by the postal service.

AUCTION BOUND

Our policy is to keep our pre-owned inventory here no longer than 45 days (what we refer to in the industry as "fresh"). After 45 days, we tag the vehicle for transport to auction.

FAQs:

Is there anything wrong with the vehicle?
Please understand that before any vehicle is placed on our lot it is thoroughly inspected and reconditioned.
*(excludes vehicles marked "as is")

Why didn't the vehicle sell earlier?
Several scenarios may come into play – we may have several of the same make/model/ and color on our lot at the same time. Also, quite frankly, as much as we advertise, sometimes a person may not think to look here for a pre-owned Jeep or Mustang, etc.

What's the catch?
Nothing, our "fresh lot" policy is your gain. So, take a look at our "Auction Bound" inventory. You may find your next great vehicle here!
